Mr. Key [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The Department of National Heritage contract with the GAH consultancy is commercially confidential and I do not intend to publish it. The recent report "The UK National Lottery Report" published by the GAH group on 10 May 1993 is a different document from the report produced from the Government, and appears to be based on a synthesis of published sources and new and separate research. The publication of this report does not appear to constitute a breach of the contract between my Department and the GAH group. The GAH group did not inform the Department beforehand of its intention to publish such a report.

Government contracts do not normally place restrictions on the future clients a contractor may take on—either particularly or generally. However, the GAH group has given a firm undertaking in honour not to work for potential bidders for the national lottery licence.

Redundant Churches

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will enable denominations to dispose of redundant places of worship to the Historic Chapel Trust for less than full consideration.

Mr. Brooke: I have today made a direction to this effect under section 4(11) of the Redundant Churches and Other Religious Buildings Act 1969.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on (a) remuneration and (b) other expenses incurred by national health service trust board chairmen and members for each of the last two years.

Mr. Sackville: The summarised accounts of national health service trusts in England for 1991-92 record the total remuneration and emoluments of chairmen and members of NHS trust boards as some £15·5 million. This figure includes all fees, emoluments and pension contributions, but excludes travelling, subsistence and similar expenses which are not separately identifiable. Equivalent information for 1992-93 will be available later this year.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department has spent on the Wellcome manufactured whooping cough vaccine; what were the other vaccines on the market at the time that vaccine began to be used by the NHS; what has been the safety record of each of these vaccines; when it first came to the attention of her Department that there were suspected brain damage cases; when the Wellcome vaccine was withdrawn from prescription in England; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: For most of the period since whooping cough vaccine first became available, the vaccine has been ordered direct from the suppliers by district health authorities and by general practitioners. Details of total expenditure on the Wellcome product are therefore not available centrally. Other whooping cough vaccines, from Glaxo Laboratories and the Lister Institute, were available in the United Kingdom when immunisation began in 1957, but their manufacturers subsequently discontinued production. Information on the safety of these products is not available without considerable historical research, at disproportionate cost.

Suggestions in the 1970s that serious complications following immunisation were occurring more frequently than previously thought led to the joint review by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. The joint review reported in 1981. Its main conclusion was that the connection between permanent brain damage and whooping cough vaccine had not been established. More recently, an extensive study by the United States Institute of Medicine concluded that there is insufficient evidence to indicate a causal relationship between diphtheria, tetanus and pertussis (whooping cough) vaccine and chronic neurological damage and other specified disorders.

All vaccines are examined carefully before release for safety and efficacy and only vaccines which match exacting specifications are used. All adverse reactions to vaccines are carefully monitored both by the CSM and the JCVI which advise the United Kingdom health departments.

The Wellcome whooping cough vaccine has not been withdrawn. It is now supplied by Evans Medical as a combined vaccine with diphtheria and tetanus, known as DTP, and supplied for the United Kingdom's childhood immunisation programme. More than 90 per cent. of infants receive DTP and reported cases of whooping cough in this country have fallen to exceptionally low levels, with only one death since 1990.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the budget of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The provision for advances to and payments on behalf of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority for 1993-94 is:

Current expenditure	1,068,000
Capital expenditure	18,000

The authority is required to recover 50 per cent. of its running costs through fees paid by licensed centres.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to ensure enforcement of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 in every laboratory capable of doing such work in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: All research projects using human embryos must be licensed by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. Applications for a licence must have prior approval from a local research ethics committee and are subject to peer review before being considered by an HFEA licence committee. Research projects are monitored and the premises where the work is carried out are regularly inspected by the HFEA.

Human Cloning

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has that human cloning experiments have already taken place in the United Kingdom using techniques routinely used for cloning farm animals.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mental Illness

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend the national survey of mental illness to be carried out on behalf of the Department by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to cover mental illness among people over the age of 65 years; and on what grounds it has been decided to limit the national survey on mental illness to the 16 to 64 age group.

Mr. Yeo: No. Establishing levels of mental illness in children and young adolescents and in people aged 65 and over requires a different methodology.

Considerable data are already available on the prevalence of mental disorders in elderly people. These will shortly be supplemented by a study currently in progress by the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Cervical Cancer

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date departmental representatives will visit the Galton research laboratory at the university of London to see a demonstration of the HDA test for cervical cancer.

Mr. Sackville: Officials have already spoken to the founder of QUEST—developers of the hydrolised DNA assay test—to discuss the arrangements.

Public Toilets

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has commissioned of the public health consequences of a reduction in the numbers of public toilets and an increase in the incidence of sleeping rough.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about allowing voluntary residential schools to provide secure accommodation; what plans she has to amend the Secure Accommodation Regulations under the Children Act 1989; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A number of organisations have recently made inquiries about the prospect of providing secure accommodation. On 2 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced our intention to amend regulations to enable private and voluntary providers to provide secure accommodation. We intend to issue a consultation document shortly.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has plans to amend the list of the items of data that comprise the contract minimum data set in view of the comments made in a recent report from the Data Protection Registrar; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The content of the contract minimum data sets is not in question, apart from one or two items of data. The need for these items is being reviewed by officials who will meet shortly with the registrar to agree how best to address his concerns.

Pensioners (Discharge from Hospital)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning early discharge of pensioners from hospital because of the reduction in their pensions after six weeks if they reside in a nursing or residential home.

Mr. Yeo: Decisions about the discharge of patients from hospital and the type of care most appropriate to meet their individual care needs are for the professional staff involved and must be made on clinical grounds.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many claims were made for compensation in instances of medical negligence affecting children born with a disability in each year since 1987; how many (a) were settled or withdrawn prior to court hearings and (b) resulted in successful court hearings; and what was the average amount paid out in compensation.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Children

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children there were at the most convenient date in each year since 1977; and how many of them were aged on those dates (a) under one year, (b) between one and four years, (c) between five and nine years, (d) between 10 and 14 years and (e) between 15 and 17 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Estimated numbers of children resident in England and Wales, 1977-91.

(Thousands)

Mid-year (30 June)	Total children aged under 18	Ages (years):— 0	1-4	5-9	10-14	15-17

1991[1]	11,552	702	2,725	3,219	3,057	1,849

[1] The estimates for 1991 are provisional. Final 1991 population estimates (taking account of later 1991 Census results) will be published in June 1993, and estimates for the period 1982-90 will be revised slightly thereafter to make them fully consistent with these final 1991 figures.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken by her Department into the feasibility of developing a non-fault compensation scheme to deal with claims of medical negligence affecting children born with a disability.

Mr. Sackville: None.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will announce the new chairman of West Midlands regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have appointed Mr. Bryan Baker, the former deputy chairman of Tarmac plc, as chairman of West Midlands regional health authority with effect from 16 July.

Mr. Baker will succeed Sir Donald Wilson, who has been temporarily chairing the authority since January. Mr. Baker will carry forward the work begun by Sir Donald in implementing important management changes in the region.

Sir Donald will return to his former role as chairman of Mersey regional health authority. Professor Alasdair Breckenridge, the present Mersey chairman, will resume his role as the university member on the Mersey regional health authority board.

Mental Health

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to lay before Parliament a revised code of practice under section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Yeo: We have today laid the revised code of practice and copies have been placed in the Library.

Laboratory Technicians

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 356-57, on medical laboratory scientific officers, if the national health service employs laboratory technicians who are not required to have the MLSO qualification.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service employs technicians to perform a range of functions in hospital departments with laboratories and the qualifications required depend upon the nature of the post.

Mid Essex Hospital Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated by the Mid Essex hospital trust at (a) Broomfield hospital and (b) St. John's hospital in its first year as a trust; and what were the numbers treated in those hospitals each of the two previous years.

Mr. Sackville: The figures, which relate to finished consultant episodes in the general and acute specialities, are as follows:

	Number
1990-91	31,661
1992-93	32,538

All figures are aggregates relating to the same grouping of hospitals in the trust; it is not possible to give separate figures for Broomfield and St. John's because data on the individual hospitals are not available centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Citizenship

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the principal rights conferred on British citizens by virtue of their citizenship.

Mr. Charles Wardle: British nationality legislation does not itself confer rights directly upon British citizens; and there is no definitive list of such rights.

Relate

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the annual grant to Relate in each year since 1979 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1993 values.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office grant in aid to Relate for each year from 1980-81 is set out below in cash terms and real terms using 1993-94 as the base year.

	Cash terms £	Real terms £
1980-81	555,000	1,152,887
1981-82	704,000	1,333,611
1982-83	750,000	1,326,275
1983-84	788,000	1,331,839
1984-85	827,460	1,331,010

	Cash terms £	Real terms £
1985-86	864,570	1,318,717
1986-87	890,500	1,315,933
1987-88	912,870	1,278,715
1988-89	935,910	1,222,010
1989-90	958,890	1,174,790
1990-91	1,006,840	1,142,092
1991-92	1,107,500	1,177,782
1992-93	1,511,400	1,552,960
1993-94	1,530,500	1,530,500

In real terms there has been an increase of 32·75 per cent. in the grant over the period in question.

Gambling

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent per head of the population on gambling in each year since 1988; and what is his estimate for each year to 1996.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No estimate is readily available for the financial year 1988-89, and we have no forecasts for future years.

Estimated figures for net consumer expenditure on gambling—amount staked less winnings—per head per annum in the four years from 1989-90 to 1992-93 inclusive are £58, £52, £54 and £55.

Seized Assets

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by name, location and amount the projects which have shared in the £2·2 million distributed by the seized assets fund.

Mr. Jack: The projects which received a share of the £2·2 million in the seized assets fund during 1992-93 are listed in the table.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the £1 million allocated to the police from the seized assets fund was spent.

Mr. Jack: The moneys allocated in 1992-93 to the central drugs fund from the seized assets fund were used to meet some of the additional costs of international drugs investigations by the police and HM Customs and Excise; and to make reward payments to individuals who had assisted the enforcement agencies in their investigations.

Identity Cards

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department last evaluated the merits of introducing universal photo identity cards in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Jack: The introduction of a compulsory identity card was last considered in depth in 1988-89, when the Government concluded that the benefits of issuing identification cards did not outweigh the disadvantages and costs of doing so. The Government's views were given to the House by the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), on 10 February 1989, Official Report, columns 1299-309.

Although the matter is kept under review, the position remains as stated then.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the results of his Department's examination of the present experience of the operation in (a) Belgium, (b) Greece, (c) Germany, (d) Spain and (e) France of their national identity card schemes.

Mr. Jack: Earlier reviews have studied overseas practice in respect of identity cards in detail. These showed that possession of a national identity card was mandatory in Belgium, Greece, Germany and Spain. It was mandatory to carry an identity card in Belgium and Greece. Identity cards were voluntary in France but very widely used. This remains the position.

In all these countries the police are empowered to require citizens to identify themselves, a process which possession of an identity card obviously simplifies. No such general power exists in this country, where the police may only demand identification on reasonable suspicion that an offence has been committed.

Emergency Warning System

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation's national emergency warning system is still operational; and on what date he intends to have a new system fully operational.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation siren-based national air raid warning system was closed towards the end of last year. Alternative arrangements which are based on radio and television broadcasts exist. Studies are being carried out to see whether any enhancement of these facilities is required.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department what study has been made of the efficacy of the emergency national warning system in the Netherlands; and what plans he has to introduce a similar system in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are aware of the Netherlands system but have no plans to introduce similar arrangements here.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department if he will make a statement in relation to progress being made towards agreement on the proposed European Commission directive on data protection; and if he will outline the areas where there is still disagreement between member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question from him on 31 March, Official Report, column 220.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the United Kingdom's position to exclude manual files containing personal information is impeding harmonisation of the United Kingdom data protection legislation with that of other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The exclusion of manual files from the Data Protection Act 1984 is no impediment to harmonisation of data protection legislation across the European Community at the level of the Council of Europe convention. With regard to the draft EC data protection directive, the position of manual data is only one of a range of issues needing to be resolved before a common position can be reached. While it would not be appropriate for me to disclose the negotiating position of individual member states, a number of other countries share the United Kingdom's concern about the proposed application of the directive to manual files.

Ecstasy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of the drug Ecstasy have occurred within the year from 1989; and what information he has on the percentage of seized Ecstasy which is domestically manufactured within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of seizures of MDA (Ecstasy) is given in the table.

	Number
1991	1,735

None of the seized drugs are thought to have been manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Witness Support Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been undertaken by his Department into the adoption of witness support schemes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: In association with a number of children's organisations in the voluntary sector, the Home Office and other Government Departments have helped to develop a "Child Witness Pack". This was published earlier this month. The pack builds on the major legislative reforms concerning the giving of evidence by children which were introduced by the Criminal Justice Acts of 1988 and 1991. The pack is intended to help children who may have to give evidence in court and their parents or carers.

The child evidence reforms are being independently monitored over two years to assess their effectiveness. We are considering whether additional monitoring may be required specifically in relation to the "Child Witness Pack".

A copy of the "Child Witness Pack" is being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

In addition, the courts charter sets out service standards for the way all victims and witnesses are to be treated before and during any trial.

Bail Support Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been allocated to each local authority in Wales for bail support schemes for young people in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 4 February to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael), columns 297-98. No further bail support schemes have become operational in Wales under Home Office funding arrangements. An application from West Glamorgan social services is under consideration.

Escorted Prisoners

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have died while being transported under Prison Service escort for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 17 May 1993:

Deaths of prisoners under prison service escort

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of prisoners who have died while being transported under Prison Service escort in each of the last five years.

I am glad to say that in fact no prisoners have died since 1988 while under escort provided by the Prison Service. This excludes any cases in which prisoners who were already very seriously ill or injured (for example, due to an attempted suicide in the prison) may have died in an ambulance or other escort vehicle on the way to an outside hospital. Checking precisely how many deaths have occurred in these circumstances would require an extensive search of records and would be at disproportionate cost.

You will of course be aware of the case of Mr. Ernest Hogg who was found unconscious in a cellular van while under escort by Group Four Escort Services and who later died in hospital. We in the Prison Service deeply regret Mr. Hogg's tragic death and I have ordered a full inquiry into the circumstances. Of course a full public inquiry will also take place in due course in the form of the Coroner's inquest.

Mr. Ernest Hogg

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the journey leading up to the death of Ernest Hogg while in Group 4 custody, including details of the route taken and the time when he was first discovered in an inebriated state.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 17 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply directly to your Parliamentary Question about the death of Ernest Hogg.

Since a police investigation is underway into the circumstances of Mr. Hogg's death, and I understand that an inquest is to be held, it would not be appropriate for me to comment at this stage.

Safer City Projects

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria that will be used to decide the location of the 20 new safer city projects announced on 7 January.

Mr. Jack: The new safer cities project will, as before, be based on London borough, metropolitan district or district council areas.

For the first six projects, the criteria for selection include:

- high crime rates—normally a chosen area would be expected to have significantly higher crime rates than the average for England and Wales;
- the willingness of local agencies to participate in the programme;
- the area should be an urban priority area—excluding areas which have existing safer cities projects;
- the area should be targeted for other Government action.

Account will also be taken of points made by local authorities and others who have written in support of their areas becoming safer cities.

Consideration is also being given to including a candidate for Wales.

For later projects, further appraisal will be given to the selection criteria.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total sum of money available (a) in this financial year and (b) in a full financial year to the 20 safer city projects announced on 7 January; and what is the highest and lowest level of aid given to any individual project.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 May 1993]: It is not possible to give precise figures until the tendering process for the second phase of the safer cities programme referred to in the statement which I placed in the Library of the House on 11 January, Official Report, columns 601-2, is complete.

Cardiff Prison

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the non-teaching functions which will be paid for in respect of Cardiff prison in a full year under the contract awarded to Bristol university and the number of staff hours under each heading in a full year, together with the total number of non-teaching hours allowed for;

(2) if he will list the non-teaching functions paid for in respect of Cardiff prison in each of the past five years and the number of staff hours under each heading in each year, together with the total number of non-teaching hours in each year;

(3) if he will list the subjects taught by the prison education service at Cardiff prison in each of the past five years and the total number of teacher hours provided in each subject in each year and the total number of teaching hours provided in each year at the prison;

(4) if he will list the subjects that will be taught at Cardiff prison under the contract awarded to Bristol university, the number of teaching hours he estimates will be provided in respect of each subject in a full year and the total number of teaching hours that will be available at the prison in a full year;

(5) what is the total cost of the prison education system for Cardiff prison under the contract awarded to Bristol university, and the proportion that will go to direct payment for teaching hours;

(6) if he will give for each of the last five years the total cost of the prison education service at Cardiff prison, and the proportion in each year of direct teaching hours.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alun Michael, dated May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the provision of education services at HM Prison Cardiff. Not all of the information which you have sought is held by the Prison Service in the form requested. The information that is available is set out below and in the enclosed tables.

Table A provides an outline of the non-teaching duties previously required at the prison and which will initially be required of the new contractor. These are only indicative since requirements change, depending on the needs of the prison population. The Prison Service requires that these duties are undertaken but does not specify the number of hours allocated to them.

Previously Local Education Authorities were reimbursed for the actual cost of providing teachers together with an additional 5 per cent. towards the cost of administration. The new contract prices will be based on teaching time (teacher contract hours). This unit of price includes all other costs. Details of proportional costs are not held but it is estimated that over the past five years some 25 per cent. of the cost of providing teachers has been for non-teaching duties.

An indication of the subjects required at HM Prison Cardiff in 1993-94 year is set out in Table B, together with the teaching hours for each subject. The details may be subject to change during the course of the year dependent upon the on-going requirements of the prison. Subjects provided in the last five years are shown at Table C together with average teaching hours. The cost of that provision and annual teaching hours in each year are shown in Table D. The cost for 1993-94 under the new contract will be the product of the total number of teaching hours required (estimated to be 6,776) and the teacher contract hour price agreed with the contractor. The contract price will be determined in negotiations with the successful tenderer, in the light of the outcome of the appeal against the High Court judgment of 24 March in the case of Kenny and Woodroffe v. South Manchester College.

Tenders (Employment Protection)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if future invitations to companies to tender for Home Office businesses will make it clear whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 apply.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Invitations to tender will invite companies to make their own assessment of whether the regulations apply. The nature of their bid will determine whether they apply, and this cannot be determined in advance.

Unit Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the failure of the unit fines system as implemented by his Department in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend concluded that it would be right to abolish the current unit fine system on the basis of experience of its working since its implementation on 1 October 1992. He took the view that under the maximum fine levels for magistrates courts approved by Parliament in the Criminal Justice Act 1991, the mechanistic application of the rules for fixing unit fines was producing results which were anomalous and disproportionate in certain cases and that the constraints of a statutory scheme had unacceptably limited the discretion of magistrates to impose fines which properly reflected all the circumstances of the particular case.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the success of the unit fines system as implemented in the four pilot schemes.

Mr. Jack: I would refer the hon. Member to Home Office research and planning unit paper 59, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, which described and analysed the working of the four pilot schemes.

Forensic Science Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for reviewing the future of the Home Office Forensic Science Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Office Forensic Science Service is now in its third year as an executive agency. During this period it has become more commercial, customer-focused and cost conscious and has improved its service to the criminal justice system as a whole. We are now undertaking a review on how best to build on this progress. The review will concentrate in particular on how to ensure the continuing independence and impartiality of the organisation and the high standards, scientific excellence and professionalism required of forensic science for criminal casework, while enabling it to operate in an increasingly business like way. It will also need to take account of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on criminal justice on the future development of forensic science.

I hope to be able to report to the House on our conclusions before the summer recess.

Police Duties (Private Contractors)

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to permit police duties to be carried out by private contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 17 May 1993]: There is no intention to contract out or place in private hands fundamental police duties which require the powers of a constable.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received a letter from Mr. Geoffrey F. Dowsett concerning the governorship of Hong Kong; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 10 May 1993]: No trace can be found in either Home Office or Foreign and Commonwealth Office records of the letter referred to by the hon. Member. However, questions relating to the governorship of Hong Kong would normally be a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the withdrawal of central funding on those voluntary organisations from which his Department has withdrawn such funding.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 April 1993]: The considerations taken into account when a voluntary organisation applies for continued funding include: the needs of the organisation; its ability to attract funds from other sources; the basis on which existing funding was provided; and the extent to which its work contributes to the Department's strategic objectives and priorities and gives value for money.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is (a) the amount of Home Office grant aid received by each voluntary organisation in (i) 1991-92, (ii) 1992-93 and (iii) the amount offered to each in the current financial year and (b) the total amount of Home Office funding for voluntary organisations in each of these years;

(2) if he will list the voluntary organisations to which his Department has agreed to give grant aid in the current financial year;

(3) if he will list the voluntary organisations to which his Department has given grant aid in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17-18 May 1993]: The information requested in respect of 1991-92 has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Information for 1992-93 and the current financial year is not yet available centrally and could be obtained only ad hoc and at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Water Charges, Strathclyde

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the metered water charges imposed by Strathclyde regional council for each year from 1989-90 to 1993-94.

Sir Hector Monro: The metered water charges applied by Strathclyde regional council for each year from 1989-90 to 1992-94 are given in the table.

Year	Pence per cubic metre
1989-90	27·84
1990-91	30·19
1991-92	34·40
1992-93	33·20
1993-94	[1]33·50

[1] Excluding standing charges which, if incorporated, would give an equivalent charge of 34·96 pence per cubic metre.

Education Capital Grants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria for funding under the Scottish Office Education Department capital grants scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The conditions applying to funding under the Department's capital grants scheme are set out in departmental circular No. 21/1990, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much on average was contributed by sources other than rent and the private sector to the management, repair, improvement and development of each dwelling unit in Renfrew district owned and managed by (a) Scottish Homes and (b) Renfrew district council in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Individual sources of revenue or capital income to Scottish Homes and Renfrew district council are not allocated to particular items of housing expenditure.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the oustanding capital debt attributable to the housing accounts of Renfrew district council; how much the repayments on this debt amount to in the current financial year; what percentage of the average annual dwelling-based rental charge made on council-owned houses is spent on these repayments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The capital debt associated with the houses, buildings and land to which Renfrew district council's housing revenue account applies is estimated at £128·3 million on 1 April 1993. The council has budgeted for expenditure of some £1·8 million on the redemption of debt in 1993-94, which represents 4·6 per cent. of estimated total housing revenue account expenditure. Individual sources of revenue income to the council are not allocated to particular items of housing expenditure.

Carpet Manufacturing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new measures he intends to introduce to ensure the continued survival and development of the carpet manufacture industry in west and central Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The carpet industry in west and central Scotland already has access to a wide range of advice and assistance from the Scottish Office, Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies. My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce any additional measures.

Crown Office Building, Edinburgh

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much it costs to maintain and upkeep the Crown Office building, the old royal high school, in Edinburgh per annum;

(2) how many times, in each of the last five years, the Crown Office building, the old royal high school, in Edinburgh has been used; by whom; and for what purpose;

(3) how many staff are employed and at what cost to maintain and keep secure the Crown Office building, the old royal high school, in Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The old royal high school buildings presently house the office of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and the Crown Office. The buildings are in daily use as the functioning headquarters of the public prosecution system in Scotland. Included in the complex is the debating chamber used for sittings of the Scottish Grand Committee and occasionally hired by outside agencies as listed in the table. Expenditure on maintenance and upkeep of the whole Crown Office complex in 1992-93 amounted to £76,000. A permanent security presence is maintained at an annual cost of £77,000. Separate figures for the cost of the debating chamber, which is in use on fewer than six days each year, are not kept.

Royal Institute of Public Administration—meeting

1991

SALVO, Scottish Arts Lobby—conference

Law Society of Scotland, European Lawyers Union—annual congress

Oxford University Press—filming educational video

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the sites of special scientific interest within (a) Renfrew district and (b) the Paisley, South constituency.

Sir Hector Monro: There are no sites of special scientific interest within the Paisley, South constituency. For Renfrew district the information is set out in the table. Some of these sites also lie within other districts as indicated.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest within Renfrew District

Site	Other districts containing part of site
Barmufflock Dam
Boylestone Quarry
Castle Semple and Barr Lochs
Clochodrick Stone
Dargavel Burn
Erskine Langbank	Inverclyde
Formakin	Inverclyde
Glen Moss
Lock Libo	Inverclyde
Shovelboard
Waulkmill Glen
	Glasgow and Eastwood

Playgrounds

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are in place to ensure the supervision and safety of children in playgrounds in (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary schools in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Education authorities have a common law duty to care for all pupils when under their charge. In addition, the Schools (Safety and Supervision of Pupils) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 impose a specific statutory duty on education authorities to take reasonable care for the safety of pupils when under their charge. In primary schools with 50 or more pupils in attendance, and in special schools, the regulations require education authorities to ensure that pupils are supervised by at least one adult when in a playground during any break time.

Listed Buildings

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of listed buildings of all categories within (a) Renfrew district and (b) Paisley, South constituency.

Sir Hector Monro: The issue raised has been delegated to the chief executive of Historic Scotland and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graeme Munro to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 19 May 1993:

I refer to your recent written question to Sir Hector Monro, for answer on 12 May, regarding lists of listed buildings within (a) Renfrew District and (b) Paisley South constituency.

Lists of listed buildings together with catergories are available for public inspection at all planning authority offices. Similarly, copies of the lists are kept for public inspection at Historic Scotland's headquarters in Edinburgh.

I have enclosed copies of the lists for Paisley Burgh and the remainder of Renfrew District for your information. In addition, I have deposited copies of the lists in the House of Commons Library.

Security, Renfrew

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the application for grant for the introduction of closed circuit television on the streets of central Renfrew district; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only approach made concerning the matter has been from the hon. Member for Paisley, South in a letter to my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Local Government, which was answered by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State in a letter dated 21 August 1992.

Edinburgh Dental School

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the text of the letter of 4 May from the principal and vice-chancellor of Edinburgh university concerning the closure of Edinburgh dental school and his reply to it.

Mr. Lang: It is for Sir David Smith to decide whether he wishes to publicise his correspondence. I will reply to his letter of 4 May shortly.

Youth Centre, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the application for grant for a proposed development of a youth drop-in centre in the Glenburn area of Paisley.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am unable to make a statement because no application has, as yet, been received by the Scottish Office Education Department.

Council Tax

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will exclude people who were exempt from paying poll tax because of severe mental impairment from being part of the calculation in determining the number of persons in a house for council tax payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: This is provided for at paragraph 2 of schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Act 1992. The qualifying conditions are prescribed at article 4 of the Council Tax (Discounts) (Scotland) Order 1992 which was laid before Parliament on 24 June 1992.

Maternity Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account was taken of the position and needs of maternity services in Scotland in the preparation of Cm 2018 on maternity services.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 May 1993]: None. Cm 2018 was the Government's response to the report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Health, which did not cover Scotland.

Maternity Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's proposals for the future development of maternity services in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 May 1993]: The Scottish Office Home and Health Department has recently completed a policy review of maternity service provision in Scotland and I shall be considering its findings shortly. In addition, a "Framework for Action" working group on maternity services was set up in April 1992 to develop strategies for raising standards in maternity services with particular emphasis on identifying good practice and developing networks.

Buses

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which bus stations which were not sold as part of the Scottish Bus Group privatisation have subsequently been disposed of; on what terms; and to whom;

(2) if he will make a statement on the ownership of St. Andrew's square bus station, Edinburgh and Buchanan street bus station, Glasgow, subsequent to the passing of the Transport (Scotland) Act 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]: Three bus stations were retained by the Scottish Transport Group and present positions on each is as follows:

St. Andrew's Square Bus Station, Edinburgh—Negotiations are progressing with a prospective buyer.

Buchanan Bus Station, Glasgow—The lease of this property held by STG was recently sold to Strathclyde Passenger Transport Executive.

Berwick-upon-Tweed Bus Station—STG has separately marketed for sale its half interest in the property which is jointly owned with Northumbria Buses.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implementation in Scotland of notification of proscribed processes under part B block 1 authorisations of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 May 1993]: Part IV of schedule 3 of the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991 SI 1991 No. 472, prescribes for "part B" processes in Scotland by reference to blocks of process descriptions, the dates from which application may be made for authorisation to carry on an existing process. Applications were to be submitted for the first block no earlier than 1 April 1992 and not later than 31 July 1992. Therefore, to carry out a block 1 process after 31 July 1992 without applying for an authorisation under section 6 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 is an offence under the Act.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in full-time employment and unemployment in numbers and percentage terms since she assumed her present office; and what estimate she has made of the consequential effect on the Government's finances.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment estimates are produced quarterly for the months of March, June, September and December. Between March 1992 and December 1992 there was a fall of 735,000, or 4 per cent., in full-time employment in Great Britain.

In the period April 1992 to March 1993 seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom increased by 251,000 or 9 per cent.

There has been no assessment of the effects of the changes in full-time employment and unemployment on Government finances.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of unemployed people in March 1990; and what is it now.

Mr. McLoughlin: In March 1990, on the seasonally adjusted basis, there were 1,597,800 claimant unemployed in the United Kingdom compared with 2,940,800 in March 1993.

Mr Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in rank order, the unemployment rates within travel-to-work areas in the United Kingdom during each of the last three quarters.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications to add human genes to animals have been made to the Health and Safety Executive since 1987; from whom these applications were made; and whether permission was granted.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. Some work of this type has undoubtedly taken place but has not fallen into categories which are specifically notifiable in advance or which require consent.

COSHH Regulations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 the number of informations laid, the number of progress notices and the number of improvement notices served by the local authorities under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive co-ordinates voluntary returns on health and safety enforcement action from local authorities. The number of informations laid by local authorities under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations was none in 1990-91 and 18 in the year 1991-92. The returns provide the total number of improvement and prohibition notices, but do not distinguish the topic of the notice.

Career Development Loans

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has derived from the sample of trainees who have taken out career development loans on the proportion of them who secured employment within (a) three months and (b) six months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Career development loan follow-up questionnaires are sent out to a 20 per cent. random sample of trainees three months after completing their training. Results from this follow-up show that, over the 1992-93 financial year, 69 per cent. had obtained jobs immediately following training. A further 4 per cent. went on to take further training.

As no further questionnaires are sent out, it is not possible to provide information on those obtaining jobs after six months.

Staff Regrading

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to regrade her Department's staff with resultant staff surpluses at certain grades; if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the light of experience, certain aspects of advisory work in the Employment Service are being regraded. As a consequence, there will be a temporary surplus of some executive officer personnel. Pending their redeployment such staff that are surplus will undertake work of more junior grade on a temporary basis, albeit at their existing salary.

Training Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were participating in (a) employment training, (b) employment action, (c) the enterprise allowance scheme and (d) youth training in each region and for Great Britain as a whole in each month since December 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the information is contained within a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of employment training participants in March 1990 and at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: In March 1990 there were 210,000 people on employment training in Great Britain and 135,000 in March 1993.

Training Credits

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been undertaken by her Department into the feasibility of offering Government-funded training credits to all persons aged 16 years to meet the learning costs of approved courses.

Mr. McLoughlin: Youth credits are already available in 20 areas of Britain and the Government's aim is that in 1996 every 16 and 17-year-old leaving full-time education will have the offer of a credit. The Department has a programme of research to evaluate youth credits schemes, to help identify good practice emerging from operational experience, encourage continuous improvement, and inform consideration of any proposals to use a credits funding mechanism in other circumstances.

Radiation ETmergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations she has received in regard to the implementation of SI, 1992, No. 2997, Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received any representations recently on this matter.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what investigations her Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if she will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by her Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the Employment Department Group 16 cases of suspected breach of a data protection principle have been investigated by the Data Protection Registrar since November 1987 when rules on "subject access" came into force. The following table consists of a summary of the 16 cases giving details of dates, nature of complaint and remedial action taken.

Summary of investigations by the Data Protection Registrar

Date and Part of EDG	Nature of complaint	Remedial action taken
November 1987 (ED HQ)	Subject access request answer not received within the 40 days time (Principle 7)	New circular issued to staff placing more emphasis on time limit. Re-issue of instructions to staff to improve communications.
9 February 1989 (ES)	A client was visited at home by ES staff. Later he was handed a printout found by a neighbour which had on it his benefit record and written information of a sensitive nature, ie, he had been in prison (Principle 8)	Case was upheld and an ex gratia payment was made to the client. Two internal investigations were carried out and the recommendations were accepted. (a) ES appointed a central DP co-ordinator with sole responsibility for DP issues; (b) A personal message on staff responsibilities under DP was sent to all staff by the Permanent Secretary; (c) Personal copies of a DP pamphlet were sent to all ES staff.
6 April 1989 (ED HQ)	Caller supplied telephone number to office so that officer could return her call. The number is ex-directory, but she received a call from another Department. Concerned that the number was being held on computer by departments as personal data (Principle 8)	DE Data Protection Officer confirmed with offices concerned that no automated/paper means was used to keep information given. Written confirmation was sent to the Registrar's office to reply to the person making the complaint.
1 February 1990 (ES)	A client complained that ES did not respond to a subject access request within 40 days (Principle 7)	Investigation showed that no request had been received. Arrangements were made to send details. No action required.
3 May 1990 (ES)	A client complained that the inclusion of his NINO in the details shown in the window of his Giro envelope warranted an unauthorised disclosure of personal information (Principle 8)	The NINO information was removed from the windows of the envelopes.
8 June 1990 (ES)	A client complained that he did not receive an answer to a subject access request (Principle 7)	Investigations showed that a reply had been sent within the required time. Further information was sent. No action required.
23 November 1990 (HSE)	A request for personal data was not immediately identified as a subject access request, and a breakdown in the administrative procedures within the personnel section delayed a response within the time limits (Principle 7)	Apology and copy of personal data sent to complainant. System managers reminded of action and time scale for dealing with subject access requests. Personnel system instructed to make changes to their administrative procedures.
24 January 1991 (ES)	A client claimed that: (a) He did not receive a response to a subject access request; (b) The printout received after a "second" request was not within the 40 days; (c) He was not given all his personal information; and (d) Said that the printout was not accompanied by an explanatory note. (Principle 7)	Investigations showed that ES had responded to his requests within required limits and given him all information that was needed. No action required.
28 January 1991 (ES)	(Same client as 24 January 1991) After another complaint the Register asked: (a) Are ES holding information for a specific period for the client? (b) Was this data sent to the client on request? (c) Why was the client given the information shown on the attached printout? (Principle 7)	Further investigations showed that ES had complied the Act. The Registrar was informed of details. No action required.
5 June 1991 (ES)	A client complained that his benefit details had been disclosed to the tutor at his "Restart" course (Principle 8)	No action required. ES were authorised to make this type of disclosure.
12 September 1991 (ES)	A client complained that an ES application form said that information would be given to "relevant organisations". This is vague. What is "relevant" and how do ES decide? (Principle 8)	No action required. "Relevant organisations' were listed in registrations. ES decided on "relevance" by giving info to companies who notified them of vacancies.
27 November 1991 (ES)	A client complained that an ES employee had found his address through unauthorised use of the ES computer system (Principle 8)	Complaint upheld – ES staff member given three-year disciplinary penalty. No action required as investigation showed that this was an isolated incident and staff were aware of their responsibilities under the Act.

18 December 1991 (ES)	TH[illegible]ES was asking on the subject access request form for th[illegible]P registration number. The Registrar thought that this could give the impression that ES were trying to "frustrate" rather than "facilitate" those making requests (Principle 7)	Although it was on the form we did not require the information to process a request. If the client could say where the contact was with ES that was sufficient. The form has now been amended.
6 February 1992 (ES)	A client made a subject access request and then wrote to the Registrar claiming inaccuracies in the printout. The Registrar asked for details of the client so that the claims could be checked (Principle 7)	ES sent the Registrar the requested details. Client's claims were unfounded. No action required.
5 June 1992 (ES)	A client alleged that the ES never replied to a subject access request although he was verbally told that it was being dealt with (Principle 7)	Investigations showed that no request had been received. The Registrar and ES followed up with the client, but he never responded to the letters. No action required.
23 December 1992 (ES)	A client was dissatisfied with the information given on the data protection printout. He claimed that it was incorrect, ie, it showed he was paid benefit when he was not (Principle 7)	Printout was correct. The dates concerned showed periods of signing on and not payment. No action required.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textiles and Clothing

21. Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to meet representatives of the British textile and clothing industries to discuss the state of the industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no immediate plans to do so. However, my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade met representatives of the Apparel, Knitting and Textile Alliance yesterday.

One-stop Shops

22. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress with the one-stop shops initiative.

Mr. Heseltine: Six areas have been chosen to run the first pilots. The areas are Birmingham, Halton—north Cheshire—Hertfordshire, Manchester, south and east Cheshire and Tyneside. There are a further nine areas where plans are in an advanced stage. This will bring the number of one-stop shops to around 50.

I am determined that we should build on the momentum which has already been achieved and move as quickly as possible towards a full one-stop shop network.

Enterprise Initiative

23. Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his Department's plans for the development of the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Heseltine: My officials are working with the training and enterprise councils and pilot one-stop shops to develop and trial a range of new services which will build on and ultimately succeed the consultancy scheme element of the enterprise initiative package.

Heavy Electrical Goods

25. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the United Kingdom's principal export markets for heavy electrical goods.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom's principal markets for such goods in recent years have been the USA, Germany and other countries within the European Community. I understand that several large contracts have also been concluded recently with countries in the Pacific rim area.

Design Council

26. Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of the regional offices of the Design Council.

Mr. Leigh: The Design Council's regional network plays an important part in ensuring that both its services to industry and its educational activities are made more accessible to firms and institutions. The one-stop shops initiative recognises the need to simplify industry's access to a variety of services, including those offered by the council.

Exports

27. Mr. J[illegible]ques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Tra[illegible]if he will make a statement on the work of his Department in promoting the exports of British goods and services to particular markets.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Trade and Industry, working jointly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, is wholly committed to helping more United Kingdom companies to win in world markets. The changes announced last week by my right hon. Friend will reinforce our efforts, and provide a clearer focus to our export promotion work. The DTI is gearing up to provide its best ever service to exporters.

Pit Closures

28. Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when financial assistance to offset the consequences of colliery closures will be available in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Eggar: Details of the regeneration measures proposed for the Nottinghamshire coalfield areas were announced by the relevant Departments and agencies concerned on Thursday 13 May. The Secretary of State for Transport also announced on 6 May support of £6·5 million from coal regeneration funds for the Robin Hood line.

34. Mrs. Golding: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the effects of pit closures.

Mr. Heseltine: My hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and I meet the chairman of British Coal as necessary to discuss a wide range of issues concerning the coal industry.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the latest situation regarding pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on pit closures are a matter for British Coal, after consultation with the unions.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

28. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme.

Mr. Eggar: I am meeting the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme tomorrow, Thursday 20 May.

EC Product Safety Directive

30. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he is taking to implement the EC general product safety directive in full.

Mr. Leigh: My Department intends to publish a consultation document on the implementation of this directive in the early autumn. The document will contain, and seek comments on, the draft implementing regulations. It will also contain guidance notes on the interpretation of the legislation. The timing of the next steps will depend on the outcome of the consultation, but I am confident that the United Kingdom will implement the legislation by the date laid down in the directive.

Imports

31. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in the level of imports over the last 12 months.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, the volume of imports increased by 5·9 per cent.

With the completion of the single market at the end of 1992, routine border requirements and formalities were abolished for trade within the European Community. Customs declarations—the source of trade statistics until December 1992—are no longer required. A new system is being introduced but, at present, it is not possible to provide figures for trade with the European Community for January 1993 onwards.

In the 12 months to March 1993, the volume of imports from non-EC countries increased by 8·9 per cent.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

32. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet his American counterpart to discuss further action to bring the current GATT round to a conclusion.

Mr. Heseltine: I currently have no firm plans for a further meeting with United States trade representative Kantor whom I met on 31 March.

Shareholders (Disclosure of Information)

33. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his Department has any plans to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the current regulations relating to disclosure of information to shareholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has regular contact with the Confederation of British Industry on company law matters.

Small Businesses (Banks' Policies)

35. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet representatives of the clearing banks to discuss their policies towards small businesses.

Mr. Leigh: Ministers in this Department have frequent meetings with representatives of the clearing banks to discuss their policies towards small businesses and we will continue to do so.

36. Ms Eagle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he plans to meet representatives of the clearing banks in order to discuss support for small businesses.

Mr. Leigh: Ministers in this Department have frequent meetings with representatives of the clearing banks to discuss their support for small businesses and we will continue to do so.

Manufactured Goods

37. Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, the United Kingdom deficit in manufactured goods was £7·6 billion.

With the completion of the single market at the end of 1992, routine border requirements and formalities were abolished for trade within the European Community. Customs declarations—the source of trade statistics until December 1992—are no longer required. A new system is being introduced but, at present, it is not possible to provide figures for trade with the European Community for January 1993 onwards.

In the 12 months to March 1993, the United Kingdom had a deficit in manufactured goods of £5·3 billion with non-EC countries.

Non-United Kingdom Corporations

38. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many non-United Kingdom corporations operating branch plants in this country also operate major research and development establishments in this country.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau is aware of 139 research and development facilities set up by overseas-owned companies in the United Kingdom. This figure is based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figure includes only those projects where the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice. It takes no account of subsequent developments.

Company Directors (Honours)

39. Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are taken to give recognition to the contributions to public life of chairmen and managing directors of companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department is among those which make recommendations to the Prime Minister for honours to be awarded to a wide range of individuals whose contributions in their main occupations and in voluntary service are particularly meritorious.

EC Trade Deficit

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the EC's total deficit in trade with the rest of the world in 1992; and by what percentage this figure has increased or decreased over the previous five and 10 years.

Mr. Heseltine: The latest annual data are for 1991. For 1991, the EC had a trade deficit of £49·4 billion with exports of £296·9 million and imports of £346·3 million. This compares with a surplus of £4·9 billion in 1986 and a deficit of £29·3 billion in 1981. As the trade balance moves between deficit and surplus it is inappropriate to show percentage changes.

Liverpool Airport

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet officials of the Liverpool airport to discuss developments at Speke.

Mr. Sainsbury: The President of the Board of Trade has no current plans to meet officials of Liverpool airport. Nor has any such meeting been sought.

Environmental Damage (Civil Liability)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Council of Europe proposal for a convention on civil liabilities for environmental damage to be opened for signature in June.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply. We are currently considering this convention and will announce our policy towards it in due course.

THORP

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is Government policy to await the establishment of an international plutonium store before the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield is granted a licence to operate.

Mr. Eggar: No. Strict controls operate over the shipment of plutonium from United Kingdom reprocessing plants. These arrangements are quite separate from the nuclear site licence and discharge authorisations that may be required by any nuclear site. No plutonium will be shipped from Sellafield unless the Government are satisfied that it will not be misused.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what inquiries his Department has undertaken into financial irregularities within British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: BNFL has recently passed a file of evidence about individuals benefiting from certain BNFL maintenance contracts to the Cheshire constabulary. Any further investigation is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc and the police.

DEMOS

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total sum paid to businesses under the DTI's environmental management options scheme since its introduction; and what plans he has for its continuance.

Mr. Eggar: Since the introduction of DEMOS in October 1990, a total of £2,677,125 has been committed to businesses for projects approved under the scheme.

The scheme was designed to run for three years and is due to end formally on 30 September 1993. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment are currently considering what future support might be appropriate to encourage innovation in environmental technology. However, at present it is too early to say what the outcome of these discussions will be.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many businesses have succeeded in their applications for funding under DEMOS 491; and how many have been refused grant.

Mr. Eggar: The DTI's environmental management options scheme (DEMOS) has attracted 602 initial first stage applications, of which 180 have been rejected, 184 withdrew their applications, eight transferred to other schemes and 28 were asked to provide further information, but did not reply.

Two hundred and two projects have been invited to submit more detailed second stage proposals under DEMOS. Of the 66 that have submitted these proposals, 16 projects have been funded, with grants being committed to 31 businesses. In addition, some of these projects will involve the collaboration of organisations that will not receive DEMOS funding, such as local authorities. Forty-three of the projects which submitted second stage proposals were rejected.

The remainder of those invited to the second stage have either withdrawn or transferred to other schemes.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of businesses funded under DEMOS 491 showing the amount of grant paid.

Mr. Eggar: Two hundred and two projects have been invited to submit a more detailed second stage proposal under DEMOS. Of those that have submitted these proposals, 13 projects have been funded, with grants being committed to the following business:

Companies awarded DEMOS grant	Grant
British Textile Technology Group	40,000
Zinc Development Association	7,250
Textile Finishers Association	10,686
PW Greenhaulgh and Co. Ltd.	33,578

Motherwell Bridge Envirotec Ltd.	141,786
Environmental Energy Ltd.	15,730
South West Water plc	409,000
TOTAL	2,325,471

There are an additional three projects consisting of eight businesses which have also been offered grants amounting to £351,654. However, as the applicants have not yet formally accepted the offers, information on these companies is currently commercially confidential.

National Consumer Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the National Consumer Council to discuss its proposals relating to international trade.

Mr. Needham: I will be arranging a meeting with the National Consumer Council to discuss its proposals on international trade.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many patent applications have been received since 1985 for new microbes, plants and animals containing altered genes; what they were for; and which ones were approved.

Mr. Leigh: Patent applications in the field of genetic engineering invariably involve modification of the host. Microbes are, by far, the most common form of host, and it would be disproportionately expensive to ascertain the precise number. The number of applications relating to plants and animals is far fewer. There have been six published applications relating to plants, on which patent have been granted for five. These relate to the introduction of self-pollinating characteristics, herbicide resistance, disease resistance and male sterility. There have been seven published applications relating to animals, patents having been granted on three. These relate to sheep which produce stronger wool, genetically identical cattle and the introduction of genes to produce therapeutic proteins. This investigation has been restricted to those applications filed under the Patents Act 1977 which have proceeded at least to publication.

Benefits (Automatic Transfer)

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices his Department expects to close if DSS payments, including pensions, are changed to automatic credit transfer; and if he will make a statement on the trial currently being undertaken.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 May 1993]: Government policy is to encourage the take-up of ACT on a voluntary basis. We do not expect that this policy will lead to post office closures. Three different versions of the retirement pension claim form were piloted by the Benefits Agency and the results of their trial are being assessed at present.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the chief executive of the Post Office concerning future plans for payment of social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 May 1993]: Both my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I meet the chief executive of the Post Office from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues.

Technology and Innovation

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide figures for expenditure for his Department for (a) technology transfer and (b) industrial innovation (i) for the past five years and (ii) as projected for the next three years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Details of expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry in the categories requested are available from the Cabinet Office's annual review of Government-funded research and development 1991 and 1992. The figures are:

£ million

Vista UDM

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place between British Coal's head of mine service centres and Vista UDM regarding maintenance contracts for proposed recycling plants at Silverhill and Cotgrave collieries.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: This is a matter for the parties concerned.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed takeover of British Coal collieries by Vista UDM;

(2) how his Department has been involved in discussions with Vista UDM or British Coal on the future of the mine service centres at Shafton, Bestwood, Tursdale and Ashington.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: This is a matter for British Coal. I welcome any serious proposals to take over collieries which British Coal no longer wishes to operate. I know that Vista UDM is in discussions with British Coal over the proposals and I have also met Vista UDM to hear about its proposals.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place between William Hayes, the head of British Coal's mine service centres, and Vista UDM regarding work for Bestwood and Tursdale mine service centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: This is a matter for the parties concerned.

Coal Industry

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive a copy of the report commissioned by British Coal on the future of the four mine service centres.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: This is a matter for British Coal.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the future of British Coal's mine service centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The Government have received a number of representations concerning the future of mine service centres.

DEFENCE

Jungle Training

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to the British Army of jungle training in (a) Belize and (b) Borneo in the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Costs of jungle training in Belize are not separately identifiable from the overall costs of the garrison without disproportionate cost. No jungle training takes place in Borneo, but the costs of jungle training in Brunei, not including travel, were £2,300,000 in 1989-90, £1,900,000 in 1990-91 and £2,300,000 in 1991-92.

Armaments Orders

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has placed with SPEL and EXPRA in Portugal for armaments since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no records of placing any contracts with either of these companies in the last three years. Records for previous years could be checked only at disproportionate cost.

Consar

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has placed with Consar of Italy since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no records of placing any contracts with this company in the last three years. Records for previous years could be checked only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to publish information relating to emergency contingency plans in the event of a nuclear weapons transport accident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such information was provided in December 1992 in a document entitled "Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans" which has been distributed to all civil emergency services and local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who his representatives are at the New York preparatory conference on 10 to 14 May for the 1993 international review of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department was represented at the preparatory committee for the 1995 conference of the parties to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons by two officials from the defence arms control unit.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are to be made to enable all holders of the Atlantic Star to participate in the march past being held in Liverpool to commemorate the battle of the Atlantic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Arrangements for the battle of the Atlantic march past in Liverpool have been co-ordinated by the Royal Naval Association—in conjunction with Army and RAF veterans' associations—in the case of ex-service personnel, and by the Chamber of Shipping, in the case of merchant seamen. Any veterans who have not been contacted by these or other veterans' organisations and who wish to join the march past may, either as individuals or as representatives of groups, apply to the "drop-in centre" at Cunard building, Liverpool during the mornings of 16 to 28 May. Places will be allocated on a first-come first-served basis after fitness to march has been assessed.

Empty Properties, Biggin Hill

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, columns 457-58, on residential properties at Biggin Hill, what is the total housing stock belonging to his Department at Biggin Hill; and if those being sold have been offered to housing associations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department owns a total of 145 residential properties at Biggin Hill. A one-year lease on the 73 surplus properties was offered to housing associations but was not taken up. The properties are now being marketed and housing associations will be invited to bid for them.

Helicopters Landing Platform

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects work to start on the recently ordered landing platform for helicopters; and when he expects the vessel to be in operation with the Royal Navy.

Mr Aitken: Design work on the LPH commenced with the award of contract. Fabrication of the vessel is due to begin in the middle of next year with acceptance from the shipbuilder due in 1997. The ship will become operational in early 1998 following a period of trials.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Scientific Research (Russia)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assistance the United Kingdom has offered the Russian Scientific Research Institute of Organic Chemistry and Technology in Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: British scientists have long had contacts with scientists at the Institute of Organic Chemistry in Moscow, which comes under the Russian Academy of Sciences department of general and technical chemistry. These contacts have developed through assistance for Russian science funded by the Office of Science and Technology and administered through the Royal Society. As an example, Dr. Rakitin of the Moscow institute was awarded a three-month Kapitza fellowship beginning in November 1992 at the department of chemistry, Imperial college, London, in order to initiate United Kingdom/Russia collaboration in the synthesis and chemistry of heterocyclic systems of great importance to the fine chemicals industry.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mediation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the percentage of cases in which mediation leads to an outcome which is more satisfactory to those involved than that of a confrontation in court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has welcomed the growth of private mediation services and he is considering ways in which such services can contribute to his aims of reducing cost, complexity and delay in civil litigation. It is important that alternative methods of dispute resolution, whether inside or outside the court, provide scope to tailor procedures more closely to the needs of disputants. Work at this stage is concentrating on defining these differing needs, rather than attempting to assess accurately disputants' "satisfaction".

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effect of local community mediation services on reducing (a) the cost of legal aid and (b) time spent in court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Any alternative methods of resolving disputes which are more economical for the taxpayer, while being speedier and simpler to use by parties to a dispute, would be welcomed. The effect of the introduction of a new system of dispute resolution on the cost of legal aid is something that would have to be considered when developing and implementing a new scheme. As many of the disputes referred to community mediation would not, otherwise, have reached the courts, it is not possible to assess reliably the effect on court time of such services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Falklands

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Defence of 29 March, Official Report, columns 15-16, if he will make a statement on the current state of his consideration of the conduct of British troops in the Falklands in 1992.

The Attorney-General: The investigation referred to by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 29 March 1993 is continuing. The Director of Public Prosecutions will consider what action, if any, is appropriate once the investigation is completed.

TRANSPORT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Norris: In response to this question, my Department (including its agencies) has obtained information from the Office of the Data Protection Registrar as follows:

a total of 40 complaints have been received.

these complaints are categorised in the Annex according to the Principles set out in the Registrar's Guideline No. 4 booklet.

None has led to a request from the Registrar for any remedial action.

In the time available, the additional information requested could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

Sustainable Development Report

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking and what instructions he has given to prepare a draft paper as a basis for his Department's contribution to the sustainable development report.

Mr. MacGregor: Preparation of the sustainable development report is being co-ordinated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. My officials are currently discussing with the Department of the Environment the format of a consultation paper, which we hope will focus public debate about the preparation of a United Kingdom sustainable development plan.

Rail Freight

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his proposals for the privatisation of the British Railways Board's freight businesses.

Mr. MacGregor: I have today published a document, "Rail Freight Privatisation—The Government's Proposals", which sets out the Government's plans to restructure British Rail's existing freight businesses for privatisation. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and in the Vote Office.

The key proposals are: to split British Rail's existing trainload businesses into three geographical companies for transfer to private sector ownership; to establish the channel tunnel freight business on a sound commercial footing with the aim of privatisation as soon as possible; to invite proposals from the private sector on the future of the Freightliner domestic and deep-sea container business; and to privatise Rail Express Systems, which carries Royal Mail letter traffic, as soon as practicable.

The combination of privatisation and open access to the railway network will promote the development of a rail freight industry which is efficient, competitive and responsive to customers' needs.

Railway Pensions

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has reached final conclusions on the future arrangements for railway pensions after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have now completed my consultations about the future of railway pensions. I have had very helpful discussions with representatives of pensioners and of contributing members to the railway pension scheme, with the trustees, with the trade unions and with the Railways Board.

My objective remains to preserve the security of rights enjoyed by pensioners and members while adopting arrangements to suit the new structure of the privatised industry. The proposals I am announcing today meet this objective.

I have decided that there should be set up, under the powers granted in the Railways Bill, a joint industry pension scheme for the railways. This will be broadly on the basis set out in the consultation paper "Railway Pensions after Privatisation" issued in January. The governance and administration of the joint industry scheme will continue to involve both the employers and employees in the industry. We shall be discussing the detailed arrangements with interested parties. The eventual arrangements will need to reflect the recommendations of the pensions law review committee chaired by Professor Goode.

Existing employees' rights will be protected by statutory orders made under the Railways Bill. The benefits offered to employees must be no less favourable than those in the existing scheme. There will be no penalties for involuntary breaks in employment. The present schemes under which the employer matches additional voluntary contributions made by employees (BRASS schemes) will continue subject to the existing right of the employer to withdraw matching for new or increased contributions.

Employees should be reassured by the statutory protection of these benefits. But I now propose to go further and give those staff serving at Royal Assent an individual right to remain in the joint industry scheme for as long as they are still employed in the railway industry. An amendment to the Bill to secure this "indefeasible" right—on which representatives have placed great importance—will be brought forward in another place.

There will in addition be specific safeguards, in franchise contracts, to cover the transfer of pension funds when a franchise changes hands.

In our consultation paper we proposed two possible broad approaches to arrangements for existing pensioners. Option 2 would have involved an appropriate portion of each fund being transferred to the Government, in return for guaranteed index-linked pensions. There was very little support for this option in the consultation. The Government have decided not to proceed with it.

Instead, Option 1, a closed scheme for railway pensioners with appropriate support by investment, will be set up in due course, which will enable them to participate in any future surpluses there may be. We shall discuss with the trustees and the board the timetable for establishing this scheme taking account of the need to have clear arrangements in place as soon as possible. But we recognise the trustees' need for time to rearrange their investments to secure the pensions of their members. Meanwhile, the pensioners will continue in the BR scheme with the board's remaining employees. Again in response to points made in consultation, I am content for the pensioners' closed scheme to be managed as part of the joint industry scheme, provided that its governance arrangements are satisfactory. This will require further discussion and will again need to reflect the outcome of the Goode committee's recommendations.

The division of funds between sections of the joint industry scheme and any new schemes will take into account the liabilities of those schemes, and the decisions made by the trusteees following the 1990 actuarial valuation, to improve pension benefits and to reduce contribution rates. The calculations will be subject to independent actuarial advice. These calculations will be carried out in the light of the present valuation of the fund, which is expected to be completed in the autumn.

The Government will continue to make the contributions to BR pension funds fixed by the Transport Act 1980. The necessary amendments to the 1980 Act to make this possible have been put down for discussion at Report stage.

Orders for setting up new schemes, transferring funds and protection of existing employees will be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure in both Houses. Orders relating to schemes and funds will be the subject of statutory consultation with the trustees.

It is both natural and right that pensioners, pension scheme members and trustees should express their concerns and seek reassurance about pension arrangements in the privatised railway. The consultation document gave them the opportunity to do so: these decisions address those concerns and provide that reassurance.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he plans to the coastguard service in north Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Steven Norris: No changes to the coastguard service in north Devon are planned other than those already implemented over the last 12 months under the coastal review.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost, on completion, of the Selby bypass project now in train; and how much approximately has so far been spent on the project on design work, soil surveys and public inquiries, etcetera.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current estimated cost of the Selby bypass is £19 million.

The readily available information shows that £0·8 million has been spent since 1988 in respect of design work, soil surveys and public inquiries.

Applications for Orders

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what applications he has received in respect of section 6 of the Transport and Works Act 1992, stating for each the date received, the applicant and the nature of the scheme or works and where the public may obtain copies; and what arrangements exist for notifying hon. Members.

Mr. Freeman: None. One application has been made to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in respect of cooling works for a proposed generating station at South Humber Bank. This was received on 19 April from Humber Power Limited. The draft order disapplies section 6 of the Humber Conservancy Act 1905 in regard to works which are subject to separate consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989. Copies of the application are available for inspection free of charge at the county hall, Humberside county council, and the civic offices, Cleethorpes borough council. The guide to the new procedures places the responsibility on applicants to notify hon. Members with a constituency interest of applications. In this case I understand that my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) has been notified of the application.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parliamentary Seats, Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Boundary Commission will begin its review of parliamentary seats in Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that a decision will be made on this matter once an appointment has been made to fill the post of deputy chairman of the Boundary Commission for Wales.

Replica Guns

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is considering taking against the misuse of replica guns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has accepted the advice offered to him by the firearms consultative committee that the range of offences which apply to the misuse of imitation firearms should be extended. This will be implemented at a suitable legislative opportunity.

Child Deaths

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during the last five years following the death of a child charges have been brought under (a) section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and (b) sections 18 and/or 20 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861; and what sentences, on conviction, were imposed in each case.

Mr. Jack: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally.

Litter Offences

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the prosecutions brought under the Litter Act 1983 during the most recent period for which statistics are available was successful;

(2) what was the average fine imposed under the Litter Act 1983 during the most recent period for which statistics are available.

Mr. Jack: In England and Wales in 1991 there were 1,450 prosecutions under the Litter Act 1983. Eighty-three per cent. (1,199) of those proceeded against were convicted. The average fine imposed was £55.

Data for 1992 will not be available until the autumn.

Royal Family (Bugging)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all occasions where he has given interviews this year to the media on allegations of the bugging of the royal family by security or intelligence services; and if he will place in the Library copies of the available transcripts of his comments on this matter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I gave interviews to the BBC on Wednesday 12 and Thursday 13 May. If the hon. Member wishes to obtain transcripts he should contact the BBC. I was also questioned about this subject, among others, at a press conference in Edinburgh on 12 May but I cannot provide a transcript of my answers there.

Burglaries

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many burglaries have been committed within each police authority area of Wales in each year from 1987; how many have been convicted of burglary in each year; and, of those convicted, how many were registered or unregistered drug addicts at the time of the burglaries.

Mr. Jack: The information available relates to the recorded offences of burglary in Wales and persons convicted of such offences. A table showing these data is given below. Information on how many convicted burglars are registered or unregistered drug addicts is not available centrally.

Female Prisons (Complaints against Male Staff)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male staff members in each of the female prisons has been subject to official complaint for sexual misconduct in each of the past five years; and in how many cases formal disciplinary action was taken.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 20 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about complaints of sexual misconduct made against male staff working in women's prisons in each of the past five years.

Complaints of harassment or other sexual misconduct, whether made by members of staff or inmates, are dealt with in the first instance at the establishment. If formal disciplinary charges are brought, they may be resolved at the establishment under powers delegated to the governor. Not all records of such cases are retained locally; in fairness to the accused, papers relating to complaints which are dismissed or where the accused in found innocent are destroyed. Only those cases which merit a punishment beyond the scope of the governor's powers would be referred to Headquarters. Cases of proven sexual misconduct would almost certainly fall into this category but we do not have any records which would enable us to state how many such cases had been referred to us in the past five years.

A Notice to Staff on sexual harassment was issued in 1992 and we have since mid-1991 kept informal records of complaints of sexual (and racial) harassment which are referred to us by area managers, governors and other colleagues. These include complaints by both staff and inmates. We have been able to identify two complaints against male members of staff at women's establishments. In 1991, one complaint of sexual harassment against a male principal officer resulted in a written warning. In 1992 a complaint of sexual harassment against a storeman was found not to be substantiated.

Further details of other complaints could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs (Confiscation of Assets)

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was returned to the Treasury under the confiscation powers of (a) the Drug Trafficking Act 1986 and (b) the Criminal Justice Act 1988 in each financial year since their commencement.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the table:

Amount (£) recovered[1] by the Secretary of State in confiscation orders under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and the Criminal Justice Act 1988 by financial year

England and Wales

Year	Amount recovered £
Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986[2]
1987-88	} 600,000
1988-89
1989-90[3]	1,375,200
1990-91[3]	1,448,000
1991-92	5,384,500
Criminal Justice Act 1988[4]
1989-90[3]	353,700
1990-91[3]	437,100
1991-92	59,400

[1] The information collected centrally is known to be incomplete as returns were not received from all petty sessional divisions.

[2] Came into force January 1987.

[3] There was some confusion with the recording of information regarding the two Acts during these years. In consequence it is considered that data has been under recorded for the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and over recorded from the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

[4] Came into force April 1989.

Identity Cards

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to the introduction by banks of photo-identity bank cards with a tamper-proof, laser-etched signature as a possible model for the introduction of a universal photo-identity card scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The introduction of photographs on cheque and credit cards was recommended in the Home Office crime prevention unit paper 26, "Preventing Cheque and Credit Card Fraud", which was published in 1991. I understand, however, that although some banks and building societies have now introduced such cards, including laser-engraved signatures, there is not general agreement among the financial institutions that these provide the most effective way of combatting the problem of fraud.

The particular technical solutions adopted to tackle cheque and credit card fraud must be a commercial decision which lies with the banks and the retail sector. The Home Office will, however, continue to do what it can to encourage full co-operation and communication between all those bodies which have an interest in tackling this problem.

The introduction of an identity card scheme is a separate issue, and one which is kept under review. However, the Government are not at present persuaded that the benefits of issuing identity cards outweigh the disadvantages and costs. The question of possible models does not therefore arise.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to any future Home Office market testing exercise will be included in relevant documentation as a condition of contract.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The regulations form part of a statutory instrument and, if applicable, take effect and are enforceable without the need for them to be included in a condition of contract.

Unit Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his estimate of the proportion of cases in which an inappropriate fine given under the unit fine system was (a) too high and (b) too low;

(2) what is his estimate of the total number of cases in which an inappropriate fine was given under the unit fines system.

Mr. Jack: I have no basis on which to make any such estimate.

Actual fine levels imposed are the responsibility of sentencers.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he had with the Justices Clerks Society on proposals for reforming the unit fine system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Following the implementation of the unit fine system on 1 October 1992, officials in my Department had a number of discussions with representatives of the Justices Clerks Society about the way in which the scheme was operating and, latterly, about ways in which it might be modified. But, as my right hon. and learned Friend indicated in his statement on 13 May, his conclusion was that the better course was to abolish the scheme altogether. He has since then (17 May) met representatives of the society.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifiable criminal offences took place in Devon and Cornwall in 1992; and if he will publish separate figures for (a) violence against the person, (b) sexual offences, (c) robbery, (d) burglary, (e) theft and handling of stolen goods, (f) fraud and forgery, (g) criminal damage and (h) other offences.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the following table:

Notifiable offences recorded by the policy by offence group
Devon and Cornwall

Offence group	1992
Violence against the person	3,926
Sexual offences	665
Robbery	310
Burglary	28,728
Theft and handling stolen goods	60,658
Fraud and forgery	3,601
Criminal damage	15,936
Other offences	851
Total	114,675

Drug Smuggling

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many front-line customs staff have been employed on anti-drug smuggling duties in the United Kingdom and its waters during each of the last five years.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

Front-line resources devoted specifically to passenger and transport control by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise over the past five years are set out in table 1. This is not restricted to drugs enforcement because Customs' frontier controls encompass a number of prohibitions and restrictions. Other staff also contribute to the anti-smuggling effort, including specialist investigators, staff employed on freight and documentary processing and essential support services such as training and prosecutions. Table 2 shows a broad estimate of the total resource devoted to the anti-drugs effort, including such staff.

Note: Resources are counted in staff years rather than staff numbers, to take account of such factors as part-time working and overtime.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward legislation to ensure that eggs from battery hens are labelled to make that clear.

Mr. Curry: The EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations lay down the terms which may be used to describe egg production systems. The terms include "free range" and "perchery (barn)" eggs. Further descriptions are not required by those EC regulations and are not considered necessary.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers on the effect of ploughing up land with the aim of discouraging illegal encampments on elibigility for set-aside payments in respect of that land.

Mr. Curry: None. Set-aside fields can be ploughed to create a bare fallow from 1 May. Requests for an exemption from the management rules to plough the margin of a set-aside field earlier than this to help prevent illegal access have been treated sympathetically.

Integrated Administration and Control

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the timetable of processing IACS forms at each of his Department's regional centres and when he expects all forms at each centre to be accepted for grant eligibility.

Mr. Curry: Each regional service centre will now undertake a detailed check of the IACS forms to determine eligibility for aid. These checks have already begun. We shall aim to have the checks completed as quickly as possible, having regard to the time payments are due under the individual schemes involved.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what total cost he estimates for the administration of the integrated administration and control system by his Department in 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Curry: Our best estimate is that administration of IACS in England will cost in the region of £7 million in 1993-94 and £5 million in 1994-95.

Strawberries (Destruction)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise with his French counterpart the question of compensation for Mr. Russell Temple for the destruction of a quantity of Spanish strawberries near Bordeaux while en route to England.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's embassy in Paris has already protested to the French authorities about the destruction of a consignment of strawberries which one of Mr. Temple's lorries was carrying near Bordeaux; they agree that he has a strong case for compensation. We shall be in touch with Mr. Temple.

Agricultural Grants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for subsidy or grant made before 11 February remained unpaid on 11 May in the region of the United Kingdom covering the north of England.

Mr. Curry: The processing of claims under many MAFF schemes follows an annual cycle. On 11 May, the position at the northern regional service centre at Carlisle was as follows:

Since it opened on 26 January, the 1993 hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme had attracted 4,562 claims of which 4,000 had been paid. Of 3,411 claims for suckler cow premium submitted by 15 December, 2,962 had been paid. The remainder were subject to outstanding inquiries. A total of 7,200 claims for sheep annual premium submitted by 5 March 1993 awaited processing.

A total of 609 applications to participate in the Lake District environmentally sensitive area had been received since its launch on 22 January and were with ADAS for the preparation of detailed agreements.

In the month of April 157 applications for capital grant schemes or payments were received and 178 were processed. The number in course of processing on 30 April was 227, of which 11 had been received before 11 February.

We have made clear in our service standard publication, "Commitment to Service", that applications for grants and subsidies will be dealt with as swiftly as possible and we set out our targets under a number of schemes. We are currently extending our monitoring systems so that we can check more closely performance against these targets.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the increase in real output of the United Kingdom tourist industry in each year since 1986; what effect the decline in the nominal exchange rate since September 1992 has had on bookings for this year; and if he will publish his forecast for the industry's real output this year and next.

Mr. Key: The information on output is not available in the form requested. The Department does not collect data on bookings and so cannot quantify the effect of the depreciation of sterling since September 1992; however, it will have made the United Kingdom a more competitive tourism destination.

The British Tourist Authority forecasts that the number of overseas visits will rise by 5 per cent. in 1993 and by a further 6 per cent. in 1994. Spending by overseas visitors is expected to rise by 4 per cent. (in cash terms) in 1993, and by a further 4 per cent. in 1994. The English tourist board forecasts that the number of domestic tourism trips of one night or more will rise by 1½ per cent. in both 1993 and 1994. Spending on domestic tourism trips is expected to rise by 7 per cent. (in cash terms) in 1993 and by a further 5½ per cent. in 1994.

Arts

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the Government's activities in the field of the arts since 1987.

Mr. Brooke: The Government aim to create the conditions which enable the arts to flourish. This is now the responsibility of my Department, the creation of which indicates the priority that the Government place both on the arts and on the other areas for which it carries responsibility. Most of the Department's funding for the arts is channelled through the Arts Council of Great Britain (ACGB); decisions on funding arts organisations are taken by ACGB at arm's length from Government. Grant-in-aid for the ACGB has risen from £139·3 million in 1987-88 to £225·6 million in 1993-94, an increase of 16 per cent. in real terms.

EDUCATION

Humanities Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he is considering for the funding of humanities research.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have considered carefully the appropriate framework for supporting humanities research, in the light of the Follett report and of the debate in another place on 17 February.

The Government support humanities research primarily through the higher education funding councils (HEFCs), which have allocated some £90 million research funding for the humanities for the 1993-94 academic year. It also funds the British Academy to provide postgraduate and senior research awards and support research activities and facilities in the humanities: the Department for Education's grant to the academy for the 1993-94 financial year is some £22 million (an increase of 11 per cent. over the previous year).

For research in the humanities the most important resources are the time of individual scholars, and library and other collections. For the humanities these are supported almost entirely through the HEFCs' institutional grant, as are permanent academic salaries in the sciences. The Higher Education Funding Council for England is undertaking a review of library provision. The Government do not believe that humanities research would be strengthened by reducing reliance on the HEFCs' institutional grant as the means of supporting academic salaries and research collections.

Since the major channel for Government funding for humanities research will continue to be the HEFCs, the Government has concluded that the responsibility for promoting and funding it should remain with the Education Departments. This will allow the Office of Science and Technology to focus on its core responsibilities.

The Government have also concluded that a research council established to manage the appropriate proportion of the resources available to humanities research would not be viable. The Government consider, moreover, that the direction and consolidation of research that the existing research councils provide would not be appropriate in the humanities.

The Government believe that the existing structures for supporting humanities research, operating through the HEFCs and the British Academy, are best suited to meeting the particular needs of research in the humanities, and will continue to support high quality research in these disciplines in the United Kingdom.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools which have voted in favour of becoming grant-maintained are waiting for their applications to be accepted by his Department.

Mr. Forth: There are 166 schools whose proposals for self-governing (grant-maintained) status are currently under consideration in the Department. A further 87 have voted in favour of applying for self-governing status but have yet to publish proposals.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those organisations which have been approved by his Department as registered grant-maintained school auditors under the CIPFA scheme of audit regulation approved by his Department on 18 January.

Mr. Forth: Self-governing state schools (grant-maintained) are required to have an external audit of their accounts undertaken annually by one of the following: the Audit Commission; members of one of the professional accountancy bodies which are recognised supervisory bodies and who are also registered to audit limited companies in accordance with the companies legislation; or people or members of any other body approved by the Department of Trade and Industry to audit limited companies or approved by the Department of Education to audit grant-maintained schools.

This Department has approved the CIPFA scheme of audit registration for this purpose but, as with the other professional bodies who can audit grant-maintained schools, is not responsible for approving the individuals or organisations applying for registration. That is a matter for the professional bodies concerned, who both register and monitor the auditors.

I understand that the CIPFA has registered the following bodies under its scheme for the audit of grant-maintained schools:

Surrey county council
Dudley metropolitan borough council
Hampshire county council
Norfolk county council
London borough of Croydon
Derbyshire county council
Bedfordshire county council
Dorset county council
Hertfordshire county council
Lincolnshire county council
Nottinghamshire county council
Kent county council
Cambridgeshire county council
Gloucestershire county council
Northamptonshire county council

The requirements for external audits of grant-maintained schools are specified in an audit code issued by this Department. This includes an obligation on schools to notify the Department of the auditors they appoint.

School Tests

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the publication, or otherwise, of the results of key stage 1 and 3 tests in schools this year; and what percentage of schools he expects to carry out these tests.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend intends to publish national curriculum test results in school performance tables this year. The primary tables will show the proportion of seven-year-old pupils in each primary school reaching or exceeding the level expected of a typical seven-year-old—level 2—in the core subjects of English, mathematics, science and in reading. The secondary performance tables will show the proportion of 14-year-olds in each secondary school reaching or exceeding the level expected of a typical 14-year-old—level

6—in mathematics and science. School results in English will not be published until 1994. My right hon. Friend has said that he will decide whether tests for 14-year-olds in technology should take place in 1994 in the light of this year's tests.

My right hon. Friend also intends to publish both national and local analyses of the results of key stage one and three tests in England this autumn, although he has made clear that the local analyses will not include the results of the tests of 14-year-olds in English and technology.

My right hon. Friend has repeatedly said that this summer's tests should be administered in the interest of pupils and in order to learn lessons for the future.

Students

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total full-time equivalent number of students in higher education, postgraduate and undergraduate, from the United Kingdom and EC, in each year from 1980 to the most recent year available.

Mr. Boswell: Total full-time equivalent (FTE) student numbers of United Kingdom and EC domiciled[1] higher education students in Great Britain institutions are shown in the table:

Year	FTE[2] (thousands)
1981	570·5
1982	587·8
1983	603·6
1984	612·4
1985	624·1
1986	642·1
1987	655·4
1988	678·6
1989	724·8
1990	785·3
1991	880·6

[1] Includes a small number of non-EC overseas domiciled part-time students.

[2] An illustrative weight of 0·35 has been applied to part-time students to derive full-time equivalent student numbers.

Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he has given, in connection with considering the potential membership of the proposed Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority, to the reasons given by Lord Skidelsky and Dr. John Marenbon for their resignations from the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend regrets the resignations of Lord Skidelsky and Dr. Marenbon from SEAC, and is aware of the reasons they gave. When considering the appointment of members to the proposed SCAA he will take account of relevant comments made to him from all sources.

Charters

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress he has made in issuing charters for further and higher education.

Mr. Patten: I have today issued the charters for further and higher education as consultative documents. I am seeking the views of a number of organisations including the representative bodies of universities and colleges before publishing the final documents in the autumn. Copies of the charters have been placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting on charters for Wales.

EMPLOYMENT

Defence Work

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to encourage the allocation of defence work and related employment to the north of England and Scotland.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement on Friday 14 May 1993, Official Report, column 603.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about her Department since April 1989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Select Committee has published 14 reports since April 1989. The Government's responses are contained in the following table. Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Employment Select Committee reports

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to amend the qualifying conditions for unfair dismissal set out in the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 to enable a claim for unfair dismissal to be pursued by a woman dismissed because of her pregnancy at any stage between conception and the end of maternity leave.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, currently before Parliament, contains provisions which will make it automatically unfair for an employer to dismiss an employee on maternity-related grounds during the period of her pregnancy or statutory maternity leave. This protection will apply regardless of the employee's length of service or hours of work.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Priorities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what priorities have been set for Her Majesty's Government between now and the beginning of the summer adjournment.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 14 January 1993 at columns 786-87.

Policy Objectives, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what are Her Majesty's Government's short-term, medium-term and long-term policy objectives for London.

The Prime Minister: Our policy objectives are to maintain and enhance London's position as a thriving national capital and a leading world city.

Council of Ministers (Votes)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what advice has been given to all Departments concerning the recording of answers to be published in the Official Report to parliamentary questions of all votes in meetings of the EC's Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: All Departments are being advised that statements to the House following meetings of the Council of Ministers should include details of the vote, whenever a formal vote is taken in Council, or should record that no formal votes were taken.

Correspondence (Journalists)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines he has issued governing official correspondence between civil servants and journalists; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None. Guidance on various points concerning relations between civil servants and journalists is given in "A Working Guide for Government Information Officers" produced by the information officer management unit in the Office of Public Service and Science, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Engagements

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 20 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total amount of UNHCR humanitarian aid reaching Bosnia-Herzegovina during the last two months originating from (a) the Republic of Croatia and (b) the Republic of Serbia; how much of that aid arrived by road to each destination; and how much by air.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The most recent figures available from UNHCR show that in February a total of 17,653 tonnes were delivered to Bosnia-Herzegovina, 24,330 tonnes were delivered in March and 6,131 tonnes in the first half of April. Most of this aid was delivered by road from UNHCR's distribution centres in Metkovic, Zagreb and Rijeka in Croatia and from Belgrade in Serbia. Exact figures showing the distribution from each centre are unavailable.

No aid was delivered by air to Bosnia-Herzegovina from Croatia or Serbia during this period—the airlift to Sarajevo operates from Ancona in Italy and has delivered a total of 38,356 tonnes to date. The air drops to eastern Bosnia operate from Rheinmain in Germany and have delivered 2,849 tonnes to date.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate his Department has made of the number of Serbian refugees displaced by the conflict in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations does not keep records of displaced people in the former Yugoslavia by ethnic origin. However, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimates that there are now a total of 457,000 displaced people in Serbia, of whom 291,000 have come from Bosnia-Herzegovina and 166,000 from Croatia.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on incidents involving the stopping of United Nations and humanitarian aid convoys by Croat forces in Bosnia on (a) 11 May and (b) 12 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that on Monday 10 May a UNHCR convoy manned by Bosnian Muslim drivers en route from Metkovic to Zenica was stopped at a Bosnian Croat militia (HVO) checkpoint. Reports indicate that the vehicles were damaged, some of the goods were stolen and several of the drivers were beaten. The convoy then proceeded to Gorni Vakuf, where the drivers received medical attention from British UNPROFOR troops, and finally returned to Metkovic on 11 May.

We have no reports of any incidents involving UNHCR convoys on Tuesday 11 May. But on Wednesday 12 May the HVO stopped a UNHCR convoy manned by Danish drivers which carried Italian goods and visiting Italian officials. The convoy, en route from Split to Zenica was held up for nine hours, but eventually allowed to proceed without harm to goods or personnel.

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the terms on which £65 million aid was granted to the Government of Indonesia to develop a power project in east Kalimantan; if he will name the project; and if he will list the British companies involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The £65 million loan arrangement signed with the Indonesian Government in April 1993 provided finance at 3·5 per cent. interest, repayable over 25 years with a seven-year grace period.

The Samarinda electric power project in east Kalimantan is likely to utilise most of the £65 million. The Indonesian electricity authority will award a contract for equipment supply after a competition between a number of British suppliers.

Family Planning Projects

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how ODA-funded population and family planning projects are evaluated; what criteria are used; which organisations have been evaluated; and with what results.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 May 1993]: ODA's evaluation department is responsible for formal impact evaluations of, mostly, bilateral aid spending. Their current work programme includes population and family planning projects. The criteria used for their evaluation are the same as for other ODA programmes, and include assessing how far the objectives of the spending have been achieved and its impact on intended beneficiaries in comparison with cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies were put forward by Foreign Ministers of other member states in relation to the commitment of ground forces and combat aircraft in the former Yugoslavia at the most recent EC Foreign Affairs Council.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Keighley on 19 May at column 168.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise in the European Council the issue of human rights in Croatia and the role of extreme right-wing groups in that country.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The behaviour of the Croatian Government and its human rights record are regularly discussed with our EC partners. These factors, together with the Croatian Government's attitude towards fighting between Croats and Muslims in Bosnia, and towards the Serbs in Krajina, are taken into account in determining EC policy towards Croatia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications from holders of Yugoslav passports have been refused since the introduction of visa requirements; and how many have been issued during the same period.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The method of collecting statistics at posts world wide does not normally allow us to establish the number of applications by nationality. For an initial period, however, we are monitoring the effect of the visa regime on former Yugoslav nationals at the visa sections in Belgrade, Zagreb, Vienna, Budapest, Sofia, Rome, Milan, Florence, Naples, Dusseldorf and Paris. At these Posts, up to the end of April, 494 applications from former Yugoslav nationals had been refused; 3,918 applications were granted.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to contribute monitors, including military personnel, along the border of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We support the deployment of international observers on Bosnia's borders with Serbia and Montenegro to monitor implementation of the prohibition of supplies (except humanitarian goods) to areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina controlled by the Bosnian Serbs. The United Nations Security Council is now actively considering detailed proposals. As yet no decisions have been taken on how the United Kingdom would contribute to international efforts to implement measures agreed by the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to provide monitors to police the border between Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina; and when he expects the first monitors to be in place.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Nations Security Council is actively considering proposals to deploy international observers on Bosnia's borders with Serbia and Montenegro. We hope that these personnel will take up their duties as soon as possible.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first became aware of a proposal by the Federal Government of Yugoslavia to put the border between Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina under the supervision of United Nation monitors; and how this was responded to by Her Majesty's Government and EC partners.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Serbia and Montenegro authorities announced on 6 May their intention to prohibit the supply of all goods (except humanitarian supplies) to the Bosnian Serbs. We hope that the United Nations Security Council will soon agree to deploy international observers to monitor implementation of these measures. At its meeting on 10 May the EC Foreign Affairs Council indicated that the European Community and its Member States would be willing to contribute to international efforts to support implementation.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has in respect of human rights abuses and restrictions on the press and media in Croatia; and what representations have been made to the Government of Croatia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are continuing concerns about Croatia's human rights record and treatment of the media. Several representations have been made, most recently a strong message from the EC presidency to President Tudjman on 12 May, warning that the Community would not be able to continue its support for Croatia if the violence and ethnic cleansing committed by Croats in Bosnia continue.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of detention camps operated by (a) Bosnian Serbs, (b) Bosnian Croats and (c) Bosnian Muslims in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) regularly visits 1,023 prisoners held by Bosnian Serbs in eight places of detention, 2,200 held by Bosnian Croats in six places of detention and 1,023 held by Bosnian Muslims in 15 places of detention. The ICRC is also visiting those detained during the recent fighting between Bosnian Croat and Muslim forces in central and southern Bosnia.

BBC World Service

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent estimate of the number of people living outside the United Kingdom who listen to BBC World Service broadcasts.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Latest estimates by the BBC World Service, based on audience research, indicate that the global audience for World Service broadcasts in all languages is in the region of 124 million. This figure does not include any information on audiences in certain countries, such as China, Burma and Vietnam, where reliable data are not readily available.

Wilton Park Executive Agency

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Wilton Park executive agency performed against the targets which were agreed for 1992-93; and what targets have been agreed for the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Wilton Park exceeded three of the four targets set for the 1992-93 financial year and only narrowly failed, by 1 per cent., to achieve the target for cost recovery. Commercial income was lower than expected as a result of the economic recession.

The Wilton Park departmental board met on 23 April. I have agreed to the recommendation of the board that the following key targets be adopted for this financial year:

- to increase overall income from £918,000 in 1992-93 to £959,000;
- to increase cost recovery from 71·5 per cent. in 1992-93 to 72·05 per cent.;
- to increase the overall number of Wilton Park Conference participants from 957 in 1992-93 to 995;
- to reduce the average cost to the FCO of each participant from £382 to 1992-93 to £374.

HEALTH

Patients Charter

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the progress being made in implementing the patients charter.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service has made considerable progress in implementing the patients charter since it came into effect on 1 April 1992. The patients charter has stimulated many innovative ideas and good practice at a local level and the efforts of the NHS should be recognised. From April 1993 the patients charter has been extended to primary health care with all family health service authorities producing their own local charters.

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available the letter sent to Mr. John Firth in her Department from the Audit Commission in relation to their findings on fund-holding.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 31 March at col 239.

Mammograms

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women in Pendle have been waiting more than two years for a mammogram.

Mr. Sackville: No women requiring mammography due to clinical need have waited more than two years.

Contraceptives

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to meet representatives from the United Kingdom Hormonal Contraceptive Manufacturers Group following the Government's decision to seek to extend the selected list scheme to 10 new categories.

Dr. Mawhinney: No formal invitation to meet this group has been received.

Midwives

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent midwives were employed in the NHS in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Midwifery staff, England 1987-91

	Whole-time equivalent
1987	19,130
1988	19,090
1989	19,110
1990	19,860
1991	19,640

Note: Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

NSPCC Report

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she is making to the recommendations in the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children report on joint enterprise and parents.

Mr. Yeo: I have seen a copy of the report submitted to the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, which itself is expected to report in the summer. This is principally a matter for the Home Office and I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Department, gave to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 5 May at column 83.

Prescription Charges

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men aged 65 years and over, (b) women aged 60 years and over and (c) people with family health services authority exemption certificates for prescriptions there were in each year since 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Numbers of men aged 65 years and over, women aged 60 years and over and prescription charge exemption certificates issued by family health services authorities[1] in England in each year 1988 to 1991

Year	Men aged 65 and over	Women aged 60 and over	Exemption[2] certificates
1988	2,981,002	5,752,924	635,779
1989	3,013,527	5,760,838	621,229
1990	3,036,790	5,758,402	594,894
1991	3,071,645	5,788,790	608,792

[1] Family health services authorities issue exemption certificates to pregnant women, women in the first year after the birth of a child and men and women with one or more of the medical conditions which confer entitlement to free prescriptions.

[2] Data derived from six-monthly statistical returns provided by family health services authorities.

Artificial Insemination

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the centres licensed for artificial insemination by donor from 1 August 1991, but not now licensed.

Mr. Sackville: The following donor insemination centres, operating at 1 August 1991, no longer hold licences:

Hartlepool general hospital
Mount Stuart hospital, Torquay
Royal Oldham hospital
The Heath clinic, London

The following centres were performing donor insemination on 1 August 1991, but currently hold only a storage licence:

Walm Lane clinic, London
Watford general hospital.

Non-fundholder Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of provider units known by the Department of Health and NHS management executive to be restricting services to non-fundholding GPs' patients in April 1993 and May 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for national health service purchasers—health authorities and general practitioner fundholders—to place contracts with provider units to secure high quality, cost-effective services. The Government agreed with the medical profession in 1991 that providers should not offer a contract to one purchaser that would disadvantage the patients of another. We have no evidence that hospitals are not following this guidance when offering services to potential purchasers.

Absenteeism

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report prepared by Crime Prevention Consulting on absenteeism in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

Pharmacists

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from pharmacists regarding the proposed new level of payments to pharmacists; and what will be the effect on small pharmacies.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of representations about our proposals for restructuring pharmacists' remuneration. These proposals are under discussion with the profession.

Junior Hospital Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing the hours of junior hospital doctors and dentists; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional task forces have reported that at 31 March there were 370 junior hospital doctors and dentists in England contracted for more than a maximum average of 83 hours a week. This is a fall of over 12,900, or 97 per cent., since September 1990. We also have reports that a further 125 posts have had their contracted hours reduced in April, bringing the total remaining posts to 245.

This represents significant progress in reducing junior doctors' and dentists' hours. I have written to health authority and trust chairmen to thank them and to emphasise that the small number of posts where contracted hours remain over 83 hours are tackled as a high priority. I will monitor progress closely.

We are determined to see further progress in reducing hours for the benefit of junior doctors and dentists.

Anophthalmia

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the small area health statistics unit, LSE, will be reporting on its examination of anophthalmia; and if she will publish their findings.

Dr. Mawhinney: A research proposal for a study into the incidence of anophthalmia in Great Britain has been received by the Department from Dr. Paul Elliott, the head of the environmental epidemiology unit at the London school of hygiene and tropical medicine. This proposal is being considered by external referees. The proposed length of the study is 18 months and the team would be expected to report shortly after that.

AIDS

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the report by Professor Nicholas Day on the spread of AIDS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Updated projections of HIV and AIDS for England and Wales prepared by a working group chaired by Professor Day and convened by the director of the Public Health Laboratory Service will be published shortly. It would be inappropriate to comment on the report before it is published.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the financial support given by her Department to groups campaigning on the issue of AIDS for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and the planned amount for 1994-95 expressed both in cash and real terms; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the funds made available by the Department under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to voluntary organisations in support of their prevention and care services for people infected and affected by HIV/AIDS and the years 1990-91 to 1993-94. Funding decisions for 1994-95 have not yet been made.

1993-94	1·927	1·699

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will outline her Department's proposed strategy to target funding provided for HIV/AIDS prevention work more specifically than hitherto at (a) intravenous drug users and (b) homosexual men; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what policies she is proposing to ensure that narrower targeting of funding for HIV/AIDS prevention work on particularly high-risk groups has no detrimental effect on the impact of the safer sex message directed at the general population.

Mr. Sackville: The Department will ensure that funding for HIV and AIDS prevention work strikes the right balance between maintaining awareness among the wider population, and increasing the emphasis on those whose behaviour might place them at particular risk including men who have sex with men, drug users and their sexual partners.

The work will build upon the success we have had in achieving high public awareness and include education for young people in both formal and informal settings. Health authorities have been encouraged to undertake HIV prevention initiatives for those at greatest risk and provide increased facilities for HIV testing.

Corporate Affairs Intelligence Unit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the operation of the corporate affairs intelligence unit within the NHS Management Executive with reference to its reporting mechanism and structure, its staffing structure, the number of staff employed by the unit and its budget for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 22 February at columns 482-83.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics she has on the number of reported cases of food poisoning in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the number of reported cases for England and Wales only. Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

The Government have initiated a major new surveillance programme to collect and analyse hard information about the sources and causes of human food-borne illness. As part of this programme, a major new study will start later this year in England, which aims to provide a sound basis for assessing the true incidence and causes of food-borne disease in the population as well as its economic cost.

NHS Administration

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of administration costs for (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities and (c) trusts in England.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 5 May 1993]: The latest available (1991-92) annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England record expenditure on headquarters administration totalling £312 million and £327 million respectively.

These figures cover the total revenue expenditure on the pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines and their support staff employed at headquarters levels together with the costs of the purchaser function. They exclude administrative support in hospital departments and at other local levels which is regarded as operational expenditure.

The annual accounts and financial returns of national health service trusts do not separately identify administration costs of a non-operational nature.

Private Patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much income, by region, has been generated by private patient facilities in NHS hospitals in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Figures of total income from private in-patients and out-patients, derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department, are shown in the table.

Hillingdon Hospital Incinerator

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Health and Safety Executive's most recent inspection of Hillingdon hospital incinerator; what was the date of the inspection and the outcome of consideration of corrosion in the water tubes; and if she is satisfied that inspections are being carried out sufficiently regularly for the safety of employees and local residents.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) last inspected the incinerator at Hillingdon hospital on 4 August 1992 in connection with an associated liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) storage installation.

HSE learned on 15 April that a steam boiler tube associated with the incinerator had failed on 16 March 1993. HSE has obtained confirmation from the operator of the incinerator that all the necessary thorough examinations had been made before the incident and that no repairs affecting safety had been required. HSE has also been informed that the water treatment system to prevent corrosion has since been modified and that a new boiler will be installed in June 1993. Failure of a boiler tube is detected by an automatic monitoring system which shuts down the boiler and presents no danger to employees or local residents.

It is the duty of the operator of the incinerator to ensure the health, safety and welfare of employees and the health and safety of others, including local residents, in connection with its operation. We are satisfied with HSE's arrangements to monitor the operator's compliance with health and safety legislation and that the statutory requirements in respect of the incinerator have been complied with.

Responsibility for inspecting environmental pollution matters under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 rests with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Pharmacies (West Midlands)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of pharmacies in the west midlands; and how many dispense fewer than 2,000 prescriptions a month.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1993, c. 590]: I regret that my previous reply was incorrect. It should have read:

The total number of pharmacies in the west midlands in 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available, was 1,073. Of these, 227 pharmacies were dispensing fewer than 2,000 prescriptions a month.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the numbers of regular Croatian army forces currently in Bosnia-Herzegovina; what assessment has been made of the potential additional risk their presence poses to British forces under United Nations command; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no accurate figures available of the number of regular Croatian army forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina. We judge that the involvement of these forces does not significantly increase the threat to British forces at present.

TASM

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest proposals in respect of the tactical air-to-surface missile system.

Mr. Aitken: We continue to study a range of possible options for our long-term sub-strategic nuclear capability. An announcement on the outcome will be made at the appropriate time.

Lance Corporal Gary Fryer

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send to the hon. Member for Stockton, South a full report, including the inquest and inquiry reports, of the circumstances in which Lance Corporal Gary Fryer was killed on 16 October 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A summary of the service police report into the circumstances surrounding Lance Corporal Fryer's death will be released to the next of kin, on request, after the coroner's inquest. This is standard practice in incidents of this sort, but it is not our normal practice to release the information to anyone other than the next of kin. A date for the inquest has not been fixed.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the circumstances in which Lance Corporal Gary Fryer, No. 24792566 of the Royal Corps of Signals was killed on 16 October 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Lance Corporal Gary Fryer was driving as part of a British military convoy, consisting of 14 vehicles. The convoy was driving along the autobahn route 28, en route to Emden, Germany. Because the convoy was strung out, the leading vehicle stopped on the hard shoulder on the westbound carriageway, between the junctions of Apen/Remel and Filsum.

Lance Corporal Fryer left his vehicle and was hit by a Dutch civilian articulated Scania lorry and trailer, which was attempting to overtake the convoy. He sustained fatal injuries. The accident occurred around 3 am

The incident was investigated by the German civil police and the Royal Military Police. A copy of the police reports have been passed to the Warrington coroner.

The driver of the articulated lorry is a Dutch national and faces prosecution on various charges in Holland as a result of the accident. The coroner will not fix a date for an inquest until legal proceedings concerning the accident are complete.

Radiation Warnings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts have been made by his Department to date to provide information to the general public on (a) issuing early warnings of radiation hazards, (b) the early identification and cordoning-off of contaminated areas, (c) medical screening and decontamination of those contaminated with plutonium and (d) the restoration to safe use of contaminated land and buildings in the event of a nuclear weapon transportation accident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992 require that prior information be supplied to members of the public who are likely to be in an area in which they are liable to be affected by a reasonably foreseeable radiation emergency. In the case of nuclear weapon transport, the likelihood of an accident affecting any individual member of the public is so extremely remote that prior supply of information is not required.

Sunburst Missiles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the dangers posed to British forces in the Persian Gulf by Sunburst cruise missiles; and what discussions he has had with his Ukranian counterpart about the sale of the missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no evidence that Ukraine has sold cruise missiles to Iran and the Ukrainians have publicly denied that they have made any such sale. My Department has not therefore discussed the matter with Ukraine.

Metrology

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the future metrology needs of each business section of the Defence Research Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the full financial appraisal made by his Department or the Defence Research Agency before finalising the sale of the mechanical metrology laboratory in Woolwich;

(3) what place the proposals to sell off the mechanical metrology laboratory have in his programme of asset selling or privatisation of activities within the Defence Research Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what account has been taken of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 in respect of the proposed sale of the mechanical metrology laboratory at Woolwich;

(5) what consultations took place, and with whom, prior to his granting approval to the Defence Research Agency to offer the mechanical metrology laboratory for sale;

(6) if he will list the dates (a) of publication and circulation of the Defence Research Agency consultative document on the proposed sale of the directorate of quality assurance and technical support's mechanical metrology laboratory, (b) when the option 4 was chosen as the preferred option and (c) of the initial approach to and subsequent appointment of Capita Corporate Finance Ltd;

(7) what assessment he has made of the risk to the Ministry of Defence as purchaser, both in terms of quality and price, of having to deal with a private sector monopoly provider if the sale of the directorate of quality assurance and technical support's mechanical metrology laboratory proceeds;

(8) what extent the cost/benefit analysis of option 4 contained in the Defence Research Agency's consultative document on the proposed sale of the directorate of quality assurance and technical support's mechanical metrology laboratory includes possible redundancy costs;

(9) if he will set out his proposed timetable for the sell-off of the directorate of quality assurance and technical support's mechanical metrology laboratory at Woolwich; and if he would be willing to extend this to facilitate an in-house bid being made;

(10) if he will make it his policy that the DQATS mechanical metrology laboratory will remain in Woolwich.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letters from Mr. J. Chisholm to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 20 May 1993:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the future metrology needs of the DRA.

We carried out extensive consultations with military customers, looked very carefully at out own DRA needs, and retained consultants to advise, amongst other things, on the commercial propects. As a result of this, we concluded that there was an ongoing requirement for mechanical metrology but that the MOD/DRA demand was insufficient to take up the full capability of the Laboratory. What we are seeking to do, therefore, is to find a private sector buyer who would be able to combine the potential MOD/DRA customer base with his existing commercial market and offer a cost-effective service to both us and to industry at large.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your request that the investment appraisal carried out for the posssible sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory should be placed in the Library.

The financial case for each of the possible options for the future of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory is summarised in the Consultative Document issued to staff and Trade Unions. I have today arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library. The release of any more detailed financial information could jeopardise the commercial confidentiality of the terms of sale.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the possible sale of the DRA's Mechanical Laboratory.

It has recently become apparent that the likely future income of this Mechanical Metrology Laboratory is insufficient to cover its costs. Rather than simply closing down the Laboratory I have, therefore, begun to explore the possibility of finding a private sector buyer. This is a logical response to a very specific problem. It is not part of any wider policy of privatisation.

With regard to asset selling, the DRA will, of course, be vacating a large number of sites over the next few years as part of its rationalisation programme and those sites will be handed back to the Ministry of Defence for alternative use or disposal. The site of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory at Woolwich will eventually be treated in exactly the same way.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question concerning the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations to the proposed sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory at Woolwich.

The legal view is that the 'TUPE' regulations will apply to the sale of the Laboratory and I would expect potential buyers to take account of that in putting together their bids. There are a number of non-mobile staff in the Laboratory to whom a commitment has been given that they will have the opportunity to opt to return to the MOD. This commitment will be honoured.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the proposed sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory.

Following consultation within the Ministry of Defence, Ministerial approval was given in April 1993 to initiate consultations with the staff and trades unions and at the same time to test the market for potential buyers for the Laboratory. No final decision will be taken regarding the sale until we have considered the outcome of the staff and TU consultation, which has now been completed, and evaluated the offers received.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the proposed sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory.

The Consultative Document was published and circulated to staff on 1 April 1993. It put forward Option 4 as the preferred solution but whether this is subsequently confirmed will depend on the outcome of the consultation exercise that has just been completed with the staff and trades unions and the evaluation of offers received from potential purchasers.

Capita Corporate Finance Limited were retained by the Defence Research Agency in February 1993 to carry out a financial appraisal of the Option for the Laboratory, including possible sale. They are now assisting us in the advertising of the Laboratory and will advise us on the acceptability of bids received. It will, however, be for me as Chief Executive of the Defence Research Agency to decide what final recommendations to make to the Minister of State for Defence Procurement.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the impact of the possible sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory on the service provided to Ministry of Defence customers.

The market for mechanical metrology is characterised by a diversity of both public sector and private sector suppliers. Most of the services offered by our Laboratory could be provided by alternative sources, which is why we have looked at closure as a possible option. Our Laboratory does, however, have some particular skills and capabilities which, whilst not enough to justify its retention by the DRA, are of sufficient advantage to our customers to prompt us to look for ways of sustaining its continued existence in the private sector. Survival in the private sector would, however, depend upon the Laboratory being able to attract new commercial customers and retain existing MOD ones whether owned by the DRA or by a private sector concern, it would not be a monopoly supplier.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the increase of redundancy costs in the cost/benefit analysis of the way ahead.

We have taken into account all the costs associated with each of the options available to us. That includes the redundancy costs that might arise in the event of a sale proceeding and not all staff transferring to the new owner.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the timetable for the possible sale of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory, and the feasibility of accommodating an in-house bid.

Expressions of interest were invited from private sector firms on 27 April by Capita Corporate Finance Limited who are handling the mechanics of the process for us. Final bids will be invited from the three or four most promising firms sometime in early July. We expect to be in a position to make our selection and put a recommendation to Ministers in early August.

I do not believe there is any future for Mechanical Metrology within the DRA, which is why I have been exploring the option of a sale. An in-house bid is not therefore appropriate. The reason we are pursuing the possibility of a sale for the Laboratory is that whilst the quality of the work provided is excellent, the volume and demand cannot meet costs. The Laboratory does not have the skills and network of contracts to exploit possible commercial markets which is what a potential buyer would bring. An in-house bid would, therefore, not be feasible unless augmented by considerable additional resource. I would not, however, discourage a proposal for a 'management buy-out' although this would, of course, have to be evaluated alongside other offers from the private sector.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the future location of the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory.

The DRA is already committed to withdrawing from Woolwich by 1995-96 as part of its rationalisation programme and I understand the MOD is intending to close the site shortly afterwards. It is not, therefore, feasible for the Mechanical Metrology Laboratory to remain on the site in the longer term although we have made it clear to potential purchasers that they could negotiate an agreement with the MOD to keep the Laboratory on the site for a transitional period.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is proposed to establish the directorate general test and evaluation as an agency; and if he has considered incorporating the present directorate of quality assurance and technical support's mechanical metrology laboratory within the proposed agency.

Mr. Aitken: Although the Directorate General of Test and Evaluation has been identified as a candidate for agency status I have not yet taken a final decision. The Mechanical Metrology Laboratory has not been considered for inclusion within DGT&E but there is no reason for the task to be retained within the public sector and the aim of the Defence Research Agency—the current owner—is to offer the facility for sale as a going concern.

Falklands War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which (a) current and (b) former officers he has received reports or other documents relating to allegations concerning possible war crimes during the Falklands conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have seen one letter from a former officer who served in the Falklands during the conflict in 1982. I have also received reports from within the Department on the allegations of possible war crimes.

The allegations are currently being investigated by the Metropolitan police who have the full co-operation of my Department. During the course of their investigations, the Metropolitan police continue to have access to all relevant departmental and regimental files.

Naval Support Command

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he expects to announce his decision on the site chosen for the establishment of the naval support command; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I hope to be able to announce soon our preferred location for the headquarters of the naval support command, and the start of formal consultations with all interested parties.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, venues and methods of disposal for stocks of genetically modified organisms which have been held by his Department in each year when such disposals have occurred.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) and I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Mr. G. Pearson to Mrs. Ann Winterton, dated 20 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him if he will list the dates, venues and methods of disposal for stocks of genetically modified organisms which have been held by his Department in each year when such disposals have occurred (Question 9, Order Paper 12 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. The research includes assessing the threat to the UK Armed Forces from genetically modified organisms.

3. The reasons for producing, storing and disposing of genetically modified organisms were stated in my letter to you of 17 May 1993 in reply to your Parliamentary Question asking whether any stocks of genetically modified organisms are currently held by the Ministry of Defence. As I indicated in that letter genetically modified organisms that do not exhibit properties of value to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment research programme are destroyed. As such, genetically modified organisms are disposed of at CBDE as they are evaluated and this can be as frequent as daily. Before disposal they are inactivated by high temperature steam in an autoclave in accordance with the guidelines issued by the Health and Safety Executive Advisory Committee on Genetic Manipulation. The inactivated organisms are then disposed of using normal cleansing procedures. The work at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on genetically modified organisms has been in progress for the past 9 years and disposals have been made as described above since the start of the work.

SCOTLAND

Quarrying

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he will take on the appeal from Scottish Aggregates Ltd. against the refusal of planning permission to develop a quarry at Windyhill Farm, Elderslie by Renfrew district council; what procedures he will apply to ensure that local residents have the opportunity to put their case; what steps he takes to ensure that local elected representatives are kept abreast of the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has not received any appeal in respect of the development to which the hon. Member refers.

Council Housing

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his latest estimate of the receipts from council house sales in Edinburgh that will count towards this year's capital allocation;

(2) how much money he will allow Edinburgh district council to borrow for capital expenditure on council housing this year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Edinburgh district council's gross final HRA capital allocation for investment in council housing in 1993-94 is £30·702 million. This consists of a net allocation of £14·855 million, plus estimated HRA capital receipts of £15·847 million (of which £14·926 million are in respect of council house sales).

Water Bills

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated added cost to the average water bill in (a) Lothian and (b) Strathclyde as a result of non-payment of water bills.

Sir Hector Monro: In setting council water charges for 1993-94, Lothian and Strathclyde regional councils have assumed collection rates of 95 per cent. and 90 per cent. respectively. On average, this gives added costs of £3 in Lothian and £6 in Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households in (a) Lothian and (b) Strathclyde are in arrears with water bills; and what is the estimated amount.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of the numbers of households in Lothian and Strathclyde in arrears with community water charges are not held centrally.

Raymond Gilmour

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current position relating to the appeal of Raymond Gilmour, currently detained in Saughton prison on the conviction of murder.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Representations were submitted on behalf of Mr. Raymond Gilmour on 8 January and 12 March this year concerning his conviction for murder at Glasgow High Court on 7 June 1982. Detailed inquiries are being made into the matters raised by these petitions. The hon. Member will be informed as soon as a decision has been reached in his constituent's case.

Children's Hospices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 11 February to the hon. Member for Ayr, Official Report, columns 785-86, what plans he has for the development of childrens' hospices to serve areas of Scotland remote from the hospice proposed by the Children's Hospice Association, Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: None. The hospice being established by the Children's Hospice Association Scotland will accept children from all parts of Scotland.

Railway Stations (Lifts)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration British Rail's advisory group on disability has given to installing passenger lifts to allow people with mobility disabilities access to railway stations in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The role of the British Rail advisory group on disability (BRAG) is to advise BR on provision for disabled passengers. The group does not report to Ministers. The consideration by BRAG of any specific issues is therefore an internal matter for the group and for BR.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Lang: The Office of the Data Protection Registrar has verified that one complaint of unauthorised disclosure was received against the Scottish Office on 9 May 1991. After investigation, the Registrar confirmed that under the Data Protection Act 1984 no breach of the principle of disclosure had taken place.

General Practitioners

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 408, what steps he has taken to ensure that general practitioner fund holders, in providing care themselves, or in setting contracts with other providers, will not directly disadvantage NHS patients from other practices.

Mr. Stewart: Existing guidance concerning GP fund holders' setting contracts with other providers is contained in the procedural manual on GP fund-holding issued by the management executive of the national health service in Scotland. This already requires that providers ensure that contracts with one purchaser will not disadvantage the patients of another.

Copies of this manual have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

In consultation with health boards, guidance is currently in the process of being compiled which will incorporate the principle that GP fund holders in providing care themselves, will not directly disadvantage NHS patients from other practices. This guidance when completed will be included in the manual.

Enterprise Trust, Glasgow

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the budget and actual expenditure for each year since 1987 of the East End management unit and the East End Executive in Glasgow.

Mr. Stewart: The East End Executive is an enterprise trust, established in 1990, and has received support from a variety of public and private sector sources, including Glasgow Development Agency. The East End management unit is, I understand, jointly funded by Strathclyde regional council and Glasgow district council and has also received some project funding from the Glasgow Development Agency.

Since neither of these organisations is responsible to, nor directly funded by, the Scottish Office we do not hold the information that the hon. Member requests. I suggest that he might best take up his inquiries direct with them.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department took of countryside values in considering whether to object to the proposed opencast mining at Woodbank Farm, Armadale; if he will list each other factor considered by the Agriculture and Fisheries Department; and if he will place in the Library the text of his Department's advice to the West Lothian district council on this proposal.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department was consulted by West Lothian district council about the proposed opencast mining at Woodbank farm, Armadale, in accordance with the established procedures for consultations on developments affecting agricultural land. Wider questions concerning the effect of the proposals on the countryside would be for others to consider. After considering the agricultural quality of the land in question and the scale and nature of the proposals, the Department advised that it had no objections provided restoration and after-care are undertaken to a suitable standard. A list of detailed restoration conditions was supplied to the district council. I am arranging for a copy of the Department's response and the conditions to be placed in the Library.

Reparation and Mediation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the development of reparation and mediation between victims and offenders in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In this financial year the grant offered to Scottish Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (SACRO) for reparation and mediation was increased by just over 25 per cent. from £16,720 to £21,000. Following discussions with SACRO this grant will enable the director of the Edinburgh scheme to continue to develop the concept of reparation and mediation and to produce a document of guidance for the development of other such schemes.

Two new schemes, one in Hamilton and the other in Aberdeen, have recently received urban programme support. Reparation and mediation has a significant contribution to make within diversion from prosecution policies and research has been commissioned into the operation of the Edinburgh scheme. I will examine carefully the findings of this research and determine how best we can take forward the development of this useful alternative to prosecution.

Student Allowances

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of any changes in students' allowances for 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am publishing today the main rates of allowances payable under the postgraduate students' allowances scheme for vocational postgraduate courses which do not attract student loans, together with the rates of various supplementary allowances payable to both undergraduate and vocational postgraduate award holders. The main rates of maintenance allowance for undergraduates will remain frozen at their 1990-91 cash levels following the introduction of student loans.

Details of the new rates have been placed in the Library. The increases in these rates are in line with the 2·7 per cent. increase in the overall provision for student maintenance envisaged in the autumn statement.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the income scale which will apply to the assisted places scheme in Scotland in 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For school session 1993-94, I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contribution for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

Parental contribution
Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	percentage
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,356 but does not exceed £10,173	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £10,173 but does not exceed £11,005	12
That part (if any) which exceeds £11,005 but does not exceed £12,654	15
That part (if any) which exceeds £12,654 but does not exceed £15,189	21
That part (if any) which exceeds £15,189 but does not exceed £18,500	24
That part (if any) which exceeds £18,500	33

The relevant income scale is open ended, but the remission can, of course, be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Health Service Suspensions

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS hospital doctors and consultants are currently under suspension pending inquiries and disciplinary action.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to monitor the proportion of construction and construction-related jobs associated with the Skye bridge contract which are being secured by local labour; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 May 1993]: The contractor issues a monthly progress report which includes a breakdown of sub-contractors and work force engaged on the contract. The proportion of local sub-contractors and labour can be determined from the details given.

HIV and Drugs Services

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was given to each health board in Scotland for HIV/AIDS and drugs services in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The proposed allocation of monies to each health board in Scotland for HIV/AIDS and drugs services is shown in the table:

	HIV/AIDS		Drugs
	1992-93	1993-94	1992-93	1993-94

[1] Includes £500,000 to enable health boards to implement recommendations of the ministerial AIDS task force.

Access to Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the range of charges made by local authorities in Scotland for copies of registers requested by the public under the public access to information provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 May 1993]: This information is not held centrally. It is a matter for local authorities to set reasonable charges for providing copies of information under the terms of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Community Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a system of dowry funding to the community care arrangements in Scotland equivalent to that operated in other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. In Scotland we have adopted alternative arrangements to facilitate the transfer of resources from health boards to local authorities to reflect the shift in the balance or responsibilities that is associated with the transfer of patients from long-stay hospitals into the community. Those arrangements were arrived at after consulation with all relevant interests.

Infant Mortality

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the infant mortality rate in each Scottish parliamentary constituency over the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: As my hon. Friend the then Minister for Health and Education told the hon. Gentleman in response to his previous question on 7 June 1991 at column 320, it is not our practice to quote infant mortality rates for small areas such as individual parliamentary constituencies, because such comparisons are likely to be misleading. Infant mortality in Scotland is at an all-time low (only 6·8 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1992) and most Scottish constituencies have fewer than 10 infant deaths a year. If these small numbers of deaths are divided by the very much larger numbers of live births to give a rate per thousand, the effect of even one untimely death is such as to make the rate swing sharply up or down, making its use for comparision between areas, or between years, of little value.

I am therefore appending a table showing the infant mortality rates for Scotland and the number of infant deaths in each constituency for each of the last five years.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nominations he received for the positions on Argyll and Clyde health board which fell vacant on 31 March; which individuals, parties or organisations submitted these nominations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Total nominations received	194
Self-nominations	162
Parties or organisations	32

There is a statutory requirement on the Secretary of State to seek nominations for membership of health boards from specified bodies including local authorities and organisations representing the health professions. On this occasion it was decided in addition to place public advertisements relating to NHS trusts as well as health boards. Organisations which responded in respect of Argyll and Clyde were: univeristy of Strathclyde, Paisley chamber of commerce, British Medical Association, Scottish Trades Union Congress, Inverclyde Community Care Forum, British Red Cross Society (Dunbartonshire area), Bank of Scotland, Scottish Association of Care Home Owners, Argyll and Bute district council, Renfrewshire Enterprise Limited, Arthritis Care, Strathclyde regional council, Renfrew district council, Scottish National Housing and Town Planning Council and Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. The hon. Member himself made two nominations.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been received by (a) the Scottish Office and (b) the Scottish ambulance service about the operation of that service in the Argyll and Clyde health board area in each month since January 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The number of complaints received are as follows:

Month	Scottish Office	Scottish Ambulance Service
January	—	4
February	—	—
March	—	4
April	—	2
May	—	4
June	—	5
July	—	1
August	—	3
September	2	5
October	1	6
November	—	6
December	—	2
1993
January	3	7
February	1	8
April	3	7

In proportion to the average number of patients carried each month of 12,500, the number of complaints is relatively small at approximately 0·03 per cent. of patients dealt with. This is broadly similar to other areas in the west of Scotland. However, the Scottish ambulance service takes all complaints seriously and will investigate these promptly. The senior managers take appropriate action to remedy any practices or procedures which have been deficient and to discipline any member of staff who has failed to comply with the appropriate instructions. A senior ambulance officer will usually visit the complainant to explain and apologise where the service was not at the required standard. The Scottish ambulance service patient charter sets out the standards aimed at and the procedure for making complaints. Copies of the charter have been widely distributed and its contents are made known on a regular basis to patients and relatives being conveyed by the service.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals the Argyll and Clyde health board has for the disposal or utilisation of the former clinic at Quarry street/Church street, Johnstone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The former clinic premises have been advertised for sale by selling agents appointed by Argyll and Clyde health board.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the organisational structure of Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 May 1993]: It is the responsibility of Scottish Homes to devise an organisational structure capable of delivering the objectives contained in its strategic plan, which has to be approved annually by my right hon. Friend. The creation of any new post in the organisation at a level equivalent to grade 5 or above in the civil service requires the prior approval of my Department.

Royal Alexandra Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on refurbishing or improving the administration areas of the Royal Alexandra hospital in each of the past five years; how much is planned to be spent in (a) the current financial year and (b) the future financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1993]: Expenditure on refurbishing and improving all administration areas including those for clinicians and their administrative support staff within the Royal Alexandra hospital over the past five years was as follows:

1989-90	16,000
1990-91	365,500
1991-92	28,100
1992-93	115,500

Planned expenditure on administration areas in 1993-94 is £2,000. There are no further expenditure plans for such areas at present.

Further Education College Principals

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many principals of further education colleges in Scotland received bonus payments following the colleges' incorporation in April; how such payments were authorised; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]: Information on bonus payments to principals is not held centrally.

From 1 April 1993 the employers of further education college staff, including principals, are boards of management. Remuneration is for them to determine.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who authorised payment of bonuses to further education college principals in the year to 1 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]: Prior to 1 April 1993, principals of further education colleges were employees of education authorities. Any bonuses paid would be for them or college councils to authorise, having regard to their statutory powers.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which further education college principals received bonus payments in the year to 1 April;

(2) from which budgets bonuses to further education college principals came in the year prior to 1 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]: This information is not held centrally.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount the weighted average price of (a) services, other than foreign holidays, and (b) goods other than food, alcoholic beverages, tobacco, fuel, petrol and oil covered by the retail prices index has risen since January 1987.

Mr. Nelson: The information is not available in the form requested and can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy with respect to the exclusion from the calculation of the retail price index of such increases as are the result of Government intervention on interest rates.

Mr. Nelson: The retail prices index includes the cost of mortgage interest payments as part of the housing costs of those who are buying their own home. Because of the sensitivity of this component of the RPI to changes in interest rates, it is better when assessing underlying inflationary pressures to look at changes in the index for all items other than mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase since January 1987 in the costs of (a) mortgage interest, (b) electricity, (c) entertainments and recreation and (d) books and newspapers relative to the change in the retail prices index.

Mr. Nelson: The following table gives the information:

Retail Prices Index January 1987 to March 1993 percentage increase

Mortgage interest payments	40·6
Electricity	42·7
Entertainment and recreation	75·1
Books and newspapers	57·0
ALL ITEMS	39·3

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the materials purchased by each of the selected broad sectors of industry listed in table 18.3 of the Annual Abstract of Statistics 1992 was imported; what was the corresponding figure in 1983; and if he will provide an estimate, in each case, for the years 1968, 1973 and 1979 together with figures for changes in weighted output and for import penetration from the (i) EEC, (ii) non-EEC and (iii) total, ignoring the changing industrial and import classification, but giving overlapping figures as appropriate.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of the import content of materials purchased by manufacturers are available for 1968, 1972, 1974, 1984 and 1985[1]. These estimates, the most detailed available, are available in the Library. Estimates for 1990 will be published towards the end of this year.

The following table shows consistent estimates of net output for the years 1968, 1973, 1979, 1983 and 1990. More detailed estimates are unavailable prior to 1978.

Estimates of import penetration for 1968 to 1989 are available in the Library[2]. Separate estimates for import penetration from EC and non-EC countries are not available.

Training Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research has been conducted by his Department into the feasibility of schemes allowing employees to set their training costs against income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: We considered various schemes for tax relief for employees' training before introducing in 1991 a new income tax relief for vocational training. This vocational training relief is available to taxpayers and non-taxpayers and so benefits not just employees who pay income tax but also those outside the labour training to get back to work.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if domestic fuel bills can be zero-rated in later years after being subject to a positive rate of VAT; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Under the current EC sixth VAT directive agreed by the United Kingdom in 1976 an existing zero rate of VAT can be continued. Without a change in this directive a zero rate cannot be created, or reintroduced if ended as is proposed from next April for domestic fuel and power supplies. The directive can be changed only by the unanimous agreement of all member states.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the effect of the fall in interest rates and the real exchange rate between (a) October 1981 and November 1982 and (b) June 1985 and April 1987 on economic recovery in (i) 1982-85 and (ii) 1987-89.

Mr. Nelson: There are a large number of influences on economic activity at any one time, and it is impossible properly to assess the effects of interest rate and real exchange rate changes in isolation.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what investigations his Departments have been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Departments to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Nelson: Her Majesty's Treasury has not been subject to any investigations by the Data Protection Registrar.

Peru (Debt)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Government to Government debt is owed by the Government of Peru to Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Nelson: Outstanding debt owed to the United Kingdom Government by Peru in respect of credits guaranteed by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) and loans advanced by the Overseas Development Administration (ODA) amounts to £112 million, a large proportion of which was recently rescheduled by the Paris Club of creditor nations.

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average increase in output per head in manufacturing and non-manufacturing (a) since 1979 and (b) from 1963 to 1973.

Mr. Nelson: Between 1979 and 1992, manufacturing output per head increased by 63·4 per cent. which is equivalent to an increase of 3·8 per cent. compounded over the 13 years.

In the 10 years from 1963 to 1973, manufacturing output per head increased by 50·7 per cent. This is equivalent to an increase of 4·2 per cent. compounded over the 10 years.

Output per head in non-manufacturing industries is not measured separately.

Small Firms Corporation Tax

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms currently pay small firms corporation tax.

Mr. Dorrell: About 300,000 companies are charged to corporation tax at the small companies rate and a further 30,000 receive marginal small company relief.

Tobacco Taxes

Mr Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by tobacco taxes in 1979 and 1992, with figures adjusted for inflation.

Sir John Cope: Receipts from excise duties on tobacco products were as follows:

	Nominal	1992 prices
1978	2,153	5,970
1992	6,417	6,417

National Sustainable Strategy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the role of his Department in the drawing up of the first United Kingdom national sustainable strategy; how many civil servants in his Department will be involved in the drawing up of the plan; and what measures are being undertaken to raise awareness regarding sustainability among the departmental staff involved.

Sir John Cope: My Department will be playing a full part in the preparation of the United Kingdom's report to the UN Commission on Sustainable Development which is being co-ordinated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The number of civil servants involved will depend upon the report's contents.

Foreign Entertainers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax has been yielded in each separate tax year under the foreign entertainers legislation in the Finance Act 1986; how much of this revenue is due to tax liabilities in each year; and how much of this revenue is due to tax liabilities from past years and interest charged upon such liabilities.

Mr. Dorrell: The following is the information:

	Yield (£) relating to:
	Actual year	Previous year	Total
[1]1987-88	6,921,507	3,178,043	10,099,550

The above amounts of tax and interest (which take repayments into account) were obtained from foreign entertainers and sportsmen by the Inland Revenue foreign entertainers unit.

Family Incomes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average income for a family of four in Nottinghamshire, or the nearest corresponding region, included in or including Nottinghamshire for which figures are available; and what proportion of that income is spent on tax, including value added tax and national insurance in each year since 1988.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The table shows the available information—average household income, and income tax and employees' national insurance contributions as percentages of household income per household, for Nottinghamshire, for the calendar years 1988 to 1990.

Household income for Nottinghamshire

	1988	1989	[1]1990
Household income per household (£ per year)	15,890	17,337	18,856
Income tax as percentage of household income	14·0	12·3	12·6
Employees' national insurance contributions as percentage of household income	4·0	3·4	2·4

[1] Provisional

Notes:

1. Total household income based on the National Accounts definition of household income.
2. County estimates consistent with the date to be published in the Regional Accounts article in the May 1993 issue of "Economic Trends", and the national estimates published in the 1992 Blue Book.
3. County breakdown of income tax based on sample survey of Inland Revenue records, and employees' national insurance contributions based on sample of records held by Department of Social Security. Estimates at this level of detail are prone to large sampling errors.

Source: Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of income paid in tax, including national insurance and VAT, paid by a family with two children and earnings of (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000, (c) £20,000 and (d) £45,000 in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The figures are given in the table.

Total tax payments as a proportion of income for married couple with two children, 1988-89 to 1992-93

	Per cent. of earnings
	£10,000	£15,000	£20,000	£45,000
1988-89	37·0	39·7	39·4	44·4
1989-90	35·0	38·3	38·8	43·5
1990-91	33·2	37·0	38·2	42·9
1991-92	33·4	37·3	39·2	42·7
1992-93	31·7	36·1	38·2	42·2

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households only have income from employment, receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and have one earner, who is assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. The estimates of indirect taxes exclude rates/Community Charge and are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.

Foreign Holidays

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage the price of foreign holidays, as shown in the retail prices index, has increased since January 1987; what contribution the Government made to that increase; and what has been the effect on the balance of payments and on output and employment in the British tourist industry and on 1992 bookings in United Kingdom tourist destinations compared with the number of overseas holidays.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 May 1993]: A price index for foreign holidays has only been compiled for use in the retail prices index since February this year, following the recommendation of the RPI advisory committee. It is not possible properly to isolate the effects of the price of foreign holidays on the balance of payments, output and employment in the British tourist industry; or on 1992 bookings in United Kingdom tourist destinations compared with the number of overseas holidays.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Businesses

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the president of the Board of Trade what guidelines his Department issues to companies dealing with small businesses which do not hold BS5750.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department does not issue guidelines to industry on the use of BS5750. The decision whether or not to specify the standard is a commercial one for purchasers, many of whom find it useful in providing assurance of quality control and satisfaction of customer needs.

BS5750 should be relevant to small companies as well as larger ones, and indeed many have found that it brings significant advantages in terms of greater efficiency and better quality control. There may, however, be circumstances in which specification of the standard would be inappropriate, and purchasers would be wise to ensure that the standard is not applied indiscriminately.

Environmental and Technological Development

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his plans to amalgamate the DEMOS and ETIS schemes for assisting environmental and technological developments in industry; what the new scheme will be called; and how much money is likely to be available for it.

Mr. Eggar: The DEMOS and ETIS schemes will complete their three-year term in September 1993. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment are currently considering what future support might be appropriate to encourage innovation by industry in environmental technology. No decision has yet been taken. An announcement will be made should Departments proceed with any new scheme.

Sanitary Disposal Services

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet the Sanitary Medical Disposal Services Association.

Mr. Eggar: None.

International Energy Agency Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution was made by his Department to the International Energy Agency's recent report, "World Energy Outlook to 2010"; and what assessment he has made of the analysis adopted in the report on carbon dioxide emissions from the energy sector.

Mr. Eggar: The "World Energy Outlook to 2010" was produced as a background paper by the IEA secretariat to inform discussion at the IEA ministerial governing board meeting on the 4 June 1993. The IEA secretariat has presented its analysis to member countries at routine IEA meetings, though the report's conclusions are those of the IEA secretariat alone. My Department is examining the details of the report.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representation his Department had at the meeting of the European Safeguards Research and Development Association in the Vatican City in May.

Mr. Eggar: Two of my officials were present at the recent meeting of the European Safeguards Research and Development Association in the Vatican City in May.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry has been the subject of one complaint, in August 1990, in relation to a reported breach of principle 7 (subject access), of the Data Protection Act. Provisions to protect the confidentiality of complainants have prevented a full review of records in the time available. To date, no record has been identified of the complaint being referred to my Department for action.

If my continuing inquiries indicate to the contrary, I will respond further to the hon. Member.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 533, what boundaries he intends to use in examining the constituent parts of London for consideration of designating assisted areas; and on what basis he will calculate figures for unemployment in those areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the review of the assisted areas map our consideration of large travel-to-work areas, including London, is taking into account relevant facts about all their constituent parts. Travel-to-work areas are the smallest areas for which reliable unemployment rates are available. We are, however, taking into account the unemployment data which are available at ward and local authority level, such as numbers of unemployed. The review consultation document made it clear that other criteria, including inner city and urban problems, will also be considered.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what impact assessment for dry cleaning businesses was carried out by his Department following the Montreal agreement on chlorofluorocarbons in terms of the costs involved and on the viability of such small businesses.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: It is for Departments leading negotiations, in this case the Department of the Environment, to assess the compliance costs of international commitments which have an impact on business. However, DTI commissioned a study into the use of CFCs as solvents in 1992 which highlighted a number of the implications for the dry cleaning sector of the early phasing-out of CFCs.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what notification has been given to dry cleaning businesses of the terms and implications of the Montreal protocol on chlorofluorocarbons for modification for replacement of machinery.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: My Department has publicised the impending phase-out of ozone-depleting substances since the launch of DTI's environment programme in 1989. In addition to regular meetings between officials and representatives of the dry cleaning sector, we have published a series of information leaflets on the issue and most recently distributed over 5,500 "fliers" directly to dry cleaners publicising the latest dates for CFC phase-out and the implications for dry cleaners using CFC 113.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial provision has been made for compensation for businesses, in each constituent part of the United Kingdom, for costs incurred in complying with the EC and United Kingdom measures implementing the terms of the Montreal agreement banning chlorofluorocarbons (a) overall and (b) in respect of dry cleaning businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1993]: There is no general provision for funding investment in new equipment required to meet higher environmental standards; such subsidies would be contrary to the polluter pays principle. However, normal tax reliefs have been enhanced by the introduction of a 40 per cent. first year allowance for plant and machinery bought in the year ending 31 October 1993. Projects of regional or national benefit may be eligible for regional selective assistance where they create or maintain employment in the assisted areas.

Enterprise Initiative Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many firms in receipt of a grant under his Department's enterprise initiative scheme have gone into liquidation during the period covered by the grant; and if he will set out the total value of the relevant grants.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The DTI subsidy for assisted consultancy projects under the enterprise initiative is paid on project completion. Information on the liquidation of assisted companies is not collected.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department takes to assess the financial viability of firms involved in his Department's enterprise initiative scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 May 1993]: As part of the free business review carried out under the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme, enterprise counsellors must establish that the applicant is financially viable and has sufficient funds to finance its share of a subsidised consultancy project. This involves scrutiny of the applicant's audited accounts, management accounts, assets and liabilities.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies his Department has undertaken of the effectiveness of small business support schemes delivered by training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The Department of Trade and Industry assumed responsibility for contracting with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of business support programmes on the 1 April 1993. As yet the Department has not undertaken any formal studies of their effectiveness, but plans to do so later in the year.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on which dates he met his European counterparts in the Council of Ministers in the last 12 months; and at which meetings the issue of intervention funding for the shipping industry was discussed.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 May 1993]: In the last 12 months I represented the United Kingdom at Industry Council meetings on four occasions, on 17 June and 24 November last year and on 19 and 20 March and 4 May this year. Support for the shipbuilding industry was discussed at the 17 June meeting last year and at both meetings this year.

ENVIRONMENT

Benefits Fraud

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has regarding the contracting out of benefits fraud investigation by local authorities.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

Two local authorities have contracted out aspects of their benefit administration and two others are in the process of doing so. None has sought to contract out benefit fraud investigation.

We fully support authorities which decide to contract out elements of benefit administration that the law permits and we have issued guidance to all authorities which contains the following advice on benefit fraud investigation:

". . . Contractors should be alerted to the possibility of claimant fraud/abuse, and contracting out authorities are strongly advised to ensure that measures to detect and prevent fraud/abuse are made a contractual obligation. In view of the specialised nature of fraud investigation, the Department considers that, once the contractor's suspicions are aroused for any reason, full deteails should be passed immediately to the authority to conduct the investigation and direct further action, such as notifying the DSS District Office where Income Support or other Social Security benefits are in payment."

NORTHERN IRELAND

Protection Rackets

13. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in Northern Ireland over the last five years on charges relating to protection rackets.

Mr. Mates: There have been 55 prosecutions and 39 convictions in the five years to 11 May 1993.

Constitutional Talks

14. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had on the present status of the inter-party talks concerning Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

18. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for all-party talks on the future governance and administration of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

22. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the possible resumption of the inter-party talks on the future of Northern Ireland.

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the resumption of talks on the future of Northern Ireland.

28. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current position of the inter-party talks on the future of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had on the resumption of the talks process concerning the future of Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

EC Water Directives

15. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of implementing EC water directives in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Compliance with the EC directive on drinking water, urban waste water treatment and bathing water will require a total capital expenditure estimated at £622 million in the period up to 2005.

Ports Privatisation

16. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will announce his conclusions on the draft Ports (NI) Order 1993 following its consultation period; and how many representations he has received on the parliamentary procedure that should be applied to individual privatisation proposals.

Mr. Atkins: The consultation period ended on 2 April 1993 and I would hope to announce my conclusions by early summer. I have received a total of 52 representations during the consultation process, 18 of which concerned the parliamentary procedure for individual privatisation proposals.

Rural Planning

17. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will announce proposals relating to rural planning.

Mr. Atkins: An announcement will be made before the summer recess.

Casement Park Murders

19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he is giving to referring to the Court of Appeal convictions arising from the Casement Park murders.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations relating to the cases of three of those convicted—Mr. Patrick Kane, Mr. Michael Timmons and Mr. Sean Kelly. These, together with issues raised in the recent BBC TV "Rough Justice" programme which featured Mr. Kane's case, are currently being thoroughly examined to see whether or not there are grounds to justify a reference, the normal criterion for which is that there is some new evidence, or other consideration of substance, which has not already been before the courts and which casts doubt on the safety of the conviction. No representations have been received in respect of any other convictions relating to the events surrounding the Casement Park murders.

North America (Visit)

20. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his recent visit to North America.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In New York, Washington and Boston, I met a wide range of officials from the Administration, Congressional leaders and prominent Irish-Americans, as well as giving a series of television, radio and press interviews.

Tourism

21. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on joint co-operation with the Republic of Ireland regarding tourism.

Mr. Atkins: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board and its counterpart in the Republic of Ireland co-operate closely in areas of mutual benefit to tourism on the island of Ireland. Good progress continues on initiatives such as the international reservation systems covering all of Ireland, known as Gulliver, and with joint marketing activities. I have met my counterpart in the South twice since their general election and we are keen to find new areas for potential co-operation.

Religious Education

24. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are currently operating for the teaching of religious education in all schools; what percentage of the curriculum is devoted to the teaching of Christianity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: All schools are required to provide religious education for all pupils. In schools under the control of the education and library boards, such education must be undenominational and based on the Holy Scriptures. In voluntary schools religious education is under the control of the school managers. On a phased basis, beginning in September 1993, a core syllabus, approved by all the main churches in Northern Ireland and entirely Christian in content, will become compulsory for all schools, as part of the new statutory curriculum.

The Northern Ireland Curriculum Council has been asked to produce guidance for schools as to how a wider approach, incorporating study of other world religions, might be adopted and implemented within schools' total RE programme.

Legislation (Delays)

25. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to reduce delays between Acts of Parliament for England or Great Britain and the corresponding Orders in Council for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The Secretary of State is aware of the concerns which Northern Ireland MPs have expressed recently and we are continually looking at ways of minimising the time it takes to process legislation in Northern Ireland.

Care Homes

26. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the numbers of people in independent care homes and statutory homes at 31 January and 31 March.

Mr. Hanley: Approximately 2,921 and 12,247 beds were available in statutory and independent homes respectively at 31 January 1993, compared with approximately 2,735 and 12,852 at 31 March. It is not known how many of these beds were occupied on the dates in question.

Dyslexia

27. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers of children requiring remedial education, in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland, have had specific training to enable them to identify children suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Hanley: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nurses

29. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses were employed in Northern Ireland (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

	31 March 1979		31 March 1993
	Number	Whole-time equivalent	Number	Whole-time equivalent
Trained nurses	10,787	9,253·6	14,949	12,313·8
Other nurses	3,444	2,964·7	3,889	3,283·0
Student nurses	4,089	4,066·6	760	755·8
TOTAL	18,320	16,284·9	19,598	16,352·6

The figures for 1993 do not include 1,427 Project 2000 students.

Confessions (Access to Solicitors)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce legislation to give people being interrogated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary the opportunity of access to a solicitor before signing any confession.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No. The rights of those detained under the emergency legislation are already protected by extensive statutory safeguards. These include the right to consult with a solicitor, which can be delayed only in certain specified circumstances, and only for a maximum of 48 hours. Confessions are inadmissible if obtained by torture, inhuman or degrading treatment, or the use or threat of violence. If prima facie evidence is adduced that the accused was subjected to such treatment, the onus is on the prosecution to satisfy the court that the statement was not improperly obtained. The courts also have a wide discretion to exclude a confession if it appears appropriate to do so in order to avoid unfairness to the accused or otherwise in the interests of justice.

Interrogation Centres

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will specify cases, including dates, of people who have been awarded compensation by Her Majesty's Government as a result of maltreatment by the RUC at Castlereagh interrogation centre.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The information is not available in the form requested. However, I have today placed in the Library of the House copies of a statistical analysis, prepared by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, of claims for compensation concluded during the financial years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 arising from allegations relating to detention in holding centres.

The Police Authority paper shows that during this three year period 200 such claims were finalised. Most of the alleged incidents giving rise to these claims occurred during the period 1985-89, though some go back to the late 1970s. In 127 of the 200 cases assault was alleged.

Compensation was paid in 123 cases (62 per cent.). In only 27 of these, however, was alleged assault one of the grounds on which payment was made; payments in the remaining cases related to allegations of wrongful arrest, false imprisonment (including overholding), loss of property or other causes.

Of the 27 cases where payments were made on the basis of alleged assault, nine arose from incidents outside the holding centres themselves, including five from a single incident involving the use of plastic handcuffs. In only 18 cases, therefore, were damages paid where alleged assault inside a holding centre was a factor. These cases were, of course, dealt with on the civil burden of proof, assessed on the balance of probabilities, rather than the criminal standard of beyond reasonable doubt.

The total payment in cases in which alleged assault was found to be a factor was £69,900; the total payment in all others cases was £136,474.

The Government welcome the publication of this analysis, which confirms the impression of Lord Colville, recorded in his report of the operation in 1992 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991, that in only a small minority of cases arising from detention in the holding centres were damages paid on the basis of alleged assault. It also demonstrates how misleading has been much coverage of this issue, in the press and elsewhere.

It of course remains the firm position of both the Government and the RUC that any ill-treatment of persons in custody is wholly unacceptable. All complaints are investigated by the police, and the police investigation may be directly supervised by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints. On completion of a supervised investigation a full report goes to the commission, which is required to issue a statement as to whether or not the investigation has been carried out satisfactorily. All completed files are in any event subject to ICPC scrutiny at the end of the investigation process. The paper may also be referred to the DPP. Any police officer acting improperly may face criminal or disciplinary proceedings.

The stringent safeguards already in place for those in detention have recently been reinforced by the appointment of an independent commissioner for the holding centres, and will shortly be strengthened still further by the introduction of codes of practice governing the detention, treatment, questioning and identification of terrorist suspects. The holding centres, and the police officers who work there, play a vital role in the struggle against terrorism. These measures are intended to enhance still further public confidence that the police have nothing to hide and that persons detained in holding centres are not being illtreated or denied their rights, and also to protect the officers themselves from malicious allegations.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce legislation to enforce the video recording of interviews by the RUC at interrogation centres.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am not persuaded of the desirability of introducing video recording of interviews with terrorist suspects. There is already a formidable array of safeguards to guarantee that the rights of those detained under the emergency legislation are fully respected. These include the recent appointment of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper as independent commissioner for the holding centres.

"Making Belfast Work"

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all of the educational projects which have been funded by the "making Belfast work" programme in each of the last three years.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

The Department of Education (NI) making Belfast work 1990-91 programme

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) maintained schools and (b) controlled schools are excluded from benefiting from "making Belfast work" expenditure in Belfast.

Mr. Hanley: Within the area of the Belfast education and library board, eight maintained schools and 25 controlled schools are excluded as they are outside the "making Belfast work" initiative catchment area.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent in each of the last three years by the "making Belfast work" programme on educational projects in Belfast.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £4·434 million was spent in 1990-91, £5·323 million in 1991-92 and £6·405 million in 1992-93.

Fair Employment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the operation of the fair employment legislation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The fair employment legislation in Northern Ireland is operating very well. More than 4,000 firms are registered with the Fair Employment Commission and are monitoring their work force composition. During 1993, over 1,500 companies are required to complete their first three-yearly review of employment practices. Where necessary, these companies will be required to take affirmative action.

The Fair Employment Tribunal offers real redress to people with a genuine grievance. A number of significant decisions and substantial awards and settlements have already been made.

The effectiveness of the law is to be formally reviewed by the Government in 1995.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Testing

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what market testing procedures have been undertaken by the Benefits Agency; and what has been their total cost.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of market testing within the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 19 March 1993

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what market testing procedures have been undertaken by the Benefits Agency; and what has been their total cost.

Market testing is being carried on services within the Benefits Agency (BA) according to the plans published in the Citizen's Charter White Paper "Competing for Quality". Each service area being market tested within BA has to date undertaken the following procedures:

Set up Steering Groups.

Set up In-house and Client side teams.

Set up detailed monitoring and reporting arrangements.

Undertaken a feasibility study.

Developed their contract strategy.

As at 31 March 1993 the cost to BA of the market testing programme is £1,285,444.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Child Support Act

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many members of the tribunals set up as a result of the Child Support Act 1991 are (a) existing magistrates, (b) nominated by trade unions, (c) women, (d) lone parents and (e) under 30 years of age.

Mr. Burt: The independent tribunal service (ITS) has, to date, recruited 734 members under the provisions of the Child Support Act 1991. According to information available, 87 are existing magistrates, 102 have been nominated by trade unions, 363 are women, 36 lone parents and seven are under the age of 30.

As a matter of routine the ITS collects data only on the age and sex of its tribunal members. There may, therefore, be more magistrates, trade union nominees and lone parents than these figures indicate.

Benefits (Automated Credit Transfer)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, columns 445-46, on automated credit transfer, what proposals his Department made during discussions with banks and building societies to encourage them to persuade pensioners and benefit recipients to open accounts with them; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have made no such proposals.

Residential Care

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made as to whether projects for people with drug and alcohol problems, previously funded by his Department, will be given contracts by social services departments.

Mr. Burt: This Department has never funded such projects although individual residents in homes which cater for such people may receive social security benefits. The negotiation of contracts for social care is a matter for social services departments acting under the guidance of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Pregnant Women

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to secure that the full adult rate of income support is paid to pregnant women between the ages of 16 and 24 years, provided that they are both available for work and registered for youth training.

Mr. Burt: We have no such plan.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many and what percentage of (a) attendance allowance claims, (b) new disability living allowance claims and (c) top-up claims since February 1992 have (i) resulted in an award and (ii) been rejected; and if he will publish a breakdown in each case of whether the claim was decided solely on the statement of disability or whether a medical examination, other evidence or both were required;

(2) what were the average clearance times for (a) new claims, (b) top-up claims and (c) requests for review of disability living allowance at each disability benefit centre for each month since September 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 19 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking (1) how many and what percentage of (a) attendance allowance claims, (b) new disability living allowance claims and (c) top-up claims since February 1992 have (i) resulted in an award and (ii) been rejected; and if he will publish a breakdown in each case of whether the claim was decided solely on the statement of disability or whether a medical examination, other evidence or both were required and (2) what were the average clearance times for (a) new claims, (b) top-up claims and (c) requests for review of disability living allowance at each disability benefit centre for each month since September 1992.

Number of claims made and decided.

You asked for the number of new claims and top-up claims for DLA together with the number and percentage of awards and refusals, including reasons for refusal. Annex 1 shows a breakdown of this information together with details of decisions based upon information provided on the claim form, medical examinations and other forms of evidence.

A further breakdown detailing claims to AA from 1.2.92 to date is shown at Annex 2.

National average clearance times.

Performance on DLA is measured in terms of X per cent., of cases cleared in Y days and it is therefore not possible to state an average processing time.

It may be helpful for me to say at this stage that new DLA claims are dealt with by the regional Disability Benefit Centres (DBC) Details of the clearance times for each DBC for each month between September 1992 and April 1993, inclusive of new claims and those made under the special rules are supplied at table I.

Top-up claims are dealt with by the Claims Conversion Unit (CCU).

A breakdown, therefore by DBCs is not available. I have provided details of available information regarding performance at table 2.

Finally, Disability Living Allowance reviews are dealt with by the Disability Living Allowance Unit (DLAU). No information is, therefore, available in respect of each DBC. Table 3, however provides details of review performance figures for the specified period.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the library.

Note: AA statistics prior to April 1992 were kept on a quarterly basis and not monthly. Therefore it is not appropriate to give awards and refusals as a percentage of claims received. Due to rounding percentage figures do not always add up to 100 per cent.

Note:—The breakdown of decisions by evidence type for AA are based on the period May 1992 to April 1993 as these statistics were not recorded prior to that period. The figures shown in this table will therefore not agree with those shown in table 2 which shows the number of adjudication officer decisions for the period April 1992 to April 1993. Due to rounding percentage figures do not always add up to 100 per cent.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support recipients aged (a) between 18 and 21 years and (b) 21 and 24 years live with one or more of their parents.

Mr. Burt: [holding answer 10 May 1993]: It is estimated that in 1991 there were 250,000 18 to 21-year-olds and 100,000 22 to 24-year-olds receiving the single person rate of income support and living with one or more of their parents.

Sources:

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the number of people employed, (b) the number of start-ups and (c) the average pre-tax turnover, for small businesses in Wales for each year since 1983.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the numbers of employees employed in units of different size is available for 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991 from the size-band analyses of the censuses of employment and given in the following summary table:

Employees in employment in Wales, by size of unit[1] (thousands)

	Size of unit (employees)
September	1-49	50-199	200 and over
1984	356·1	189·4	319·5
1987	364·6	204·2	334·1

New VAT registrations give an indication of the number of business start-ups for each year. Firms with a turnover of less than £1 million each year account for over 96 per cent. of the total.

Self-employed People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of self-employed people in each local authority area in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will indicate (a) the total number of self-employed and (b) the number of self-employed who were not on the Department of Social Security's books.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the number of self-employed people in each local authority area in Wales is available only from the 1991 population census and published in part 1 of the country reports (CEN 91 CR 47 to 54 for Welsh districts and counties) available in the Library of the House. Information on self-employed persons in receipt of benefits is not available for local authority areas.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on (a) the total number of mortgages held in Wales, (b) the number of mortgages between 3 and 5 months in arrears, (c) the number of mortgages between 6 and 12 months in arrears, (d) the number of mortgages over 12 months in arrears and (e) the number of repossessions in each year from 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the total number of mortgages held in Wales and on mortgage arrears are not available centrally. However, according to the 1991 census of population there were in April 1991, 440,584 owner-occupied dwellings with residents where the dwelling was being purchased through a mortgage or loan. This includes those who were buying in stages from a council, housing association or new town (under shared ownership, co-ownership or equity-sharing schemes).

For repossessions, information is only available for the numbers of repossession orders made following mortgage possession actions entered in county courts in Wales from 1987 and is shown in the following table. The figures do not indicate how many dwellings have been repossessed through the courts as not all the orders will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession.

Repossession orders made following mortgage actions[1]

	Number
1987	2,978
1988	3,058
1989	2,799
1990	4,962
1991	7,415

[1] Figures include suspended orders, whereby the mortgagers are given an opportunity to clear their debts.
[2] Provisional

Neurofibromatosis

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to what studies are being undertaken by hospitals and medical research institutes in Wales on neurofibromatosis.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As part of an international effort, a research team at the Institute of Medical Genetics, Cardiff is seeking to isolate the defective gene that causes neurofibromatosis.

Development Partnership, Llanelli

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the partnership accounts of the partnership between the Welsh Development Agency and Llanelli borough council established for the purpose of developing the south Llanelli area.

Mr. David Hunt: Each of the parties to the joint venture account for and report their expenditure separately in the normal way. There are no formal accounts for the joint venture as a whole.

Eye Examinations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many eye examinations were carried out in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information collected centrally relates to sight tests paid for by family health services committees. No information is available centrally on the number of private sight tests carried out.

Sight tests paid for by FHSAs[1]

	Number
1985	596,778
1986	623,088
1987	651,175
1988-89	733,469
1989-90	292,060
1990-91	271,170
1991-92	332,240

[1] Sight test paid for during the period (ie the test may have taken place in the previous period).

Dead Stock (Disposal)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to end the disposal of dead stock to unlicensed premises in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The disposal of dead stock is covered by the Animal By-Products Order 1992. Carcases not destined for human consumption must be buried, incinerated or disposed of in premises which are approved under article 8 or registered under article 10 of the order, or to knacker yards licensed by local authorities under the Slaughterhouses Act 1974.

Fox Destruction Clubs

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to regulate unregistered fox destruction clubs in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of disabled persons employed by each local authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Tables showing the number and percentage of registered disabled people employed by a wide range of individual public sector employers, including local authorities, are published annually in the Employment Gazette. The information is published with the agreement of the employers concerned. The most recent figures, relating to 1 June 1992, were published in the April 1993 issue of the Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of hydatidosis were recorded in Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of deaths and discharges from NHS hospitals in Wales for which a diagnosis of hydatidosis was recorded is given in the following table for the years 1981-90.

Year	Deaths/ Discharges
1982	26
1983	32
1984	34
1985	25
1986	31
1987	25
1988	12
1990	19

This information is obtained from individual hospital activity analysis records. Figures for recent years may differ from those released previously as more information has become available. The figures may still understate the true position in that not all hospitals provide complete clinical details relating to patient discharges and deaths. Corresponding data for 1991 and 1992 are not yet available centrally on an all-Wales basis.

Pharmacies

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress regarding the negotiations for the remuneration of community pharmacists in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am very well aware of the contribution small pharmacies make to the local community. The current system of remuneration is unsatisfactory because it is poorly targeted and gives indiscriminate support to pharmacies regardless of the wider contribution they make to the health service. We want to move to a system which, within the overall sum available, will remunerate all pharmacists fairly, is related to their performance in developing a wider health role and which provides an incentive to cost-efficiency. At the same time, there is a need to provide more comprehensive support to pharmacies which provide an essential service to their communities.

Both pharmacists and health departments are committed to the concept that there should be an allowance to relate the remuneration more closely to the development of a wider professional role. The offer includes a proposal for the payment of a professional allowance to recognise the wider health role of pharmacists. The details are for negotiation with the pharmacists' representatives.

The pay offer made this year was a first step towards a longer term structure. The proposal included a transitional payment which would have left pharmacies no worse off than in 1992-93.

Negotiations continue and the pharmacists want to see more clearly the framework for the future before settling details of the year's pay.

Unemployment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) total unemployment rates, (b) unemployment rates among males and (c) unemployment rates among females according to ethnic origin in Wales, indicating the rates of unemployment for (i) whites, (ii) West Indians/Guyanese, (iii) Indians, (iv) Pakistani/Bangladeshi people, (v) African people and (vi) all other ethnic origins.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available from the 1991 census is given in the following table:

Unemployed residents aged 16 and over as a percentage of economically active residents in each ethnic group in Wales

Ethnic group[1]	Persons	Males	Females
White	10·1	12·6	6·6
Black Caribbean	21·3	27·7	11·5
Black African	28·0	31·9	21·2
Black other	23·0	28·0	16·0
Indian	9·3	8·7	10·2
Pakistani and Bangladeshi	20·3	19·9	21·5
Other	13·7	15·2	11·1
All ethnic groups	10·1	12·6	6·7

[1]A definition of the ethnic group classification used in the 1991 census is given in 1991 Census "Definitions", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been out of work in Wales, in each of the counties of Wales and each of the constituencies of Wales for (a) five years, (b) four years, (c) three years, (d) two years, (e) one year and (f) six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: All available unemployment claimant figures can be accessed on-line by staff in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the change in the level of unemployment between (a) February 1983 and February 1993 and (b) February 1984 and February 1993; and when he expects to make a statement on the new assisted area status map of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Between February 1983 and February 1993, unemployment in Wales, adjusted for seasonal factors and discontinuities, fell by 19,900 to 132,100 a drop of 13·1 per cent. The decrease between February 1984 and February 1993 was 24,900, a drop of 15·9 per cent.

I hope to be able to announce the outcome of the assisted areas review as soon as possible.

School Tests

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the publication, or otherwise, of the results of key stage 1 and 3 tests in schools this year; and what percentage of schools he expects to carry out these tests.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It remains my intention to publish available national data arising from this year's statutory assessment of seven and 14-year-olds. I wrote recently to the chairmen of governors of all maintained schools in Wales encouraging the participation of their schools in the tests. I hope that they will do so in order that the information can usefully inform the current review of the national curriculum which, is being carried out jointly by the Curriculum Council for Wales and the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

EC Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of grants received from the European Community, by each local authority in Wales in 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has not been subject to any investigations by the Data Protection Registrar.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has not been the subject of any investigations by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle.

All computer systems within the Lord Chancellor's Department comply fully with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984, as will all future systems.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals there were against a refusal of (a) a variation or extension of leave to remain in the United Kingdom, (b) entry clearance abroad, (c) entry to the country, (d) removal as an illegal entrant and (e) a decision to deport a person and the refusal to revoke a deportation order; and what the results were of these appeals.

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 14 May 1993]: The information requested was as follows during the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993:

Appeals to Immigration Adjudicators

	Received[1]	Allowed	Dismissed	Withdrawn
(a)	8,333	229	5,573	2,171
(b)	13,882	3,845	15,752	3,458
(c)	105	53	425	46
(d) and (e)[2]	1,656	33	963	275

[1]The number of appeals received does not equal those allowed, dismissed and withdrawn as the latter categories include appeals received before 1 April 1992 and determined during 1992-93.

[2]The Immigration Appellate Authorities do not record separate figures for appeals against removal as an illegal entrant and these appeals are recorded with those at (e).

EMPLOYMENT

Training Schemes (Accidents)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) fatal, (b) major and (c) minor accidents have occurred on youth training, employment training and employment action in each region and in Great Britain as a whole in each quarter since March 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Table A gives the accident figures for 1990;

Table B gives the accident figures for 1991;

Table C gives the accident figures for 1992; and

Table D gives the figures for the first quarter of 1993.

Notes:

1. Employment Department figures for trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.
2. Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.
3. Employment Action was launched in October 1991. Accident statistics for Employment Action are included from the quarter ending December 1991.
4. Eastern Region was formed during quarter ending 30 September 1992. North West Region was split into two during quarter ending 30 September 1992. Accident records for Scotland were split between Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise from the quarter ending 30 September 1991.

Pregnant Women's Rights

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been allocated by her Department towards publicity campaigns for 1992 and 1993 to explain to employers and employees their obligations and rights with regard to the employment rights of pregnant women.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department publicises employment rights for pregnant women principally through the advice leaflet "Employment Rights for the Expectant Mother".

The cost of producing and distributing this booklet in 1992-93 was £2,378, and the allocation for 1993-94 is £2,615. I will send a copy of the booklet to the hon. Member.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 85, if he will provide details of the evidence upon which he bases his estimate of the percentage savings arising from market testing in previous years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The annual reports by the central unit on purchasing on progress in Government procurement for the four years to March 1991, provide information on Departments' progress with market testing. This information, which includes savings, is derived from returns provided by Departments themselves. The annual reports are in the House Library.

No report on market-testing progress was complied for 1991-92. I shall report on the current period which runs to 30 September 1993 as soon as possible after that date.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General to what investigations his Departments have been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Departments to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

The Attorney-General: None of the Law Officers' Departments has been the subject of an investigation by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current annual spending on family credit; and what was the spending on family income support in 1979.

Mr. Burt: Family credit expenditure for 1992-93 was £864 million. This is 36 times more than the £24 million spent on family income supplement in 1978-79 in cash terms and 13 times more in real terms.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the total cost to the Exchequer of paying a Christmas bonus to pensioners in the year 1992-93 had such bonus been increased annually since 1972 in line with prices.

Miss Widdecombe: The Christmas bonus would now be worth £62·30 had it been increased annually since 1972 in line with prices. To pay it at this rate to 12·7 million beneficiaries in 1992-93 would cost £791 million.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentages of newly retired (a) men and (b) women were entitled to payments from the state earnings-related pension scheme in each year since SERPS pensions were first available.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

Percentage of awards of retirement pension containing serps[1]

	Men	Women[2]
April 1979—November 1979	44·1	7·1
December 1979—May 1980	55·3	12·5
June 1980—June 1981	62·5	14·9
July 1981—November 1981	69·7	15·2
December 1981—May 1982	74·2	18·1
June 1982—September 1982	74·6	18·9
October 1982—March 1983	77·5	19·2
April 1983—September 1983	80·1	19·9
October 1983—March 1984	79·0	18·7
April 1984—March 1985	86·9	23·6
April 1985—September 1985	88·0	23·5
October 1985—March 1986	89·1	24·1
April 1986—September 1986	91·7	29·0
October 1986—September 1987	91·9	29·3
October 1987—March 1988	92·4	29·6
April 1988—September 1988	92·8	33·7
October 1988—March 1989	92·1	32·9
April 1989—March 1990[3]	91·8	46·2
April 1990—March 1991[3]	92·1	49·0
April 1991—March 1992[3]	91·8	52·5

Notes:

[1] Includes men and women who receive SERPS through either an Additional Pension or a Contracted-Out Scheme.

[2] Includes all categories-Category A derived from contributors own contributions; Category ABL—derived from both the contributor's and her husband's contributions; Category B—derived from husband's contributions only. No SERPS is paid on Category B pensions.

[3] Up to March 1989 the proportions are derived from all new claims to contributory Retirement Pension regardless of age. From April 1989 they are based on claims by men aged 65 and women aged 60, so that claims deferred for more than a year and some claims for Category B pension are excluded. In order to match up the two series, the proportion of men with entitlement to SERPS from April 1989 onwards should be increased by about 1 percentage point and the proportion of women reduced by about 10 percentage points.

Compensation Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the clearance target for each social security benefit which will be used in the calculation of the new compensation scheme announced on 4 May.

Miss Widdecombe: The target clearance times relevant to the revised arrangements announced on 4 May are as follows:

Benefit	Clearance target[1]
Social Fund Crisis Loans	[2]
Social Fund Community Care Grants	20 days
Income Support—Claims	13 days
Sickness and Invalidity Benefit	30 days
Child Benefit	30 days
Family Credit	42 days
Disability Living Allowance	55 days
Disability Working Allowance (Claims from people starting work)	5 days
Retirement Pension	60 days

[2] On the day need arises.

The clearance targets which will be used in the cases of those benefits which do not have secondary clearance times are being considered. Where the clearance target would mean a customer having to wait longer than the 12 month period which was applicable to the arrangements before 1 April 1993, a notional target of six months will be used.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the clearance target used to calculate compensation under the scheme announced on 4 May will be the target for the year the payment should have been made, the target for the year the payment was finally made or the target for some other year.

Miss Widdecombe: The target clearance time used to calculate compensation which may be due under the revised arrangements announced on 4 May will be the clearance target relevant to the date payment of the arrears of benefit are made.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the full rules governing the award and calculation of compensation in the new compensation scheme for late payment of social security benefits announced on 4 May.

Miss Widdecombe: The criteria under which payment of compensation is considered when a payment of a new claim for a social security benefit is delayed are:

(i) The delay must be because of official error;
(ii) The arrears due must be for £50 or more; and
(iii) The delay must be for at least six months plus the relevant target for clearing the bulk of claims—usually between 85 and 95 per cent.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he wil publish a leaflet for the public setting out the rules governing the new compensation scheme for late payment of social security benefits announced on 4 May; and if he will include in it the clearance targets which are relevant for each benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's clearance targets, which relate to the revised arrangements, are published in the Benefits Agency business plan.

All district offices display details of national targets in their reception areas, and customers will be able to obtain details of the relevant clearance targets from the customer service manager at their local office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland flag

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 553-54, by what Act or instrument the Government of Northern Ireland adopted the Northern Ireland flag; and for what purpose it was adopted.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The official flag of Northern Ireland is the Union flag. In 1924, the Government of Northern Ireland was granted arms by royal warrant and had the right to display these arms on a flag or banner. In 1953, they exercised this right by giving assent to the flying of such a flag, known as the "Ulster Banner", on festive occasions.

Terrorism

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of compensation paid out for loss of property by fire and explosion in terrorist incidents over the last three years.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question is a matter for the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 20 May 1993:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the cost of compensation paid for loss of property in terrorist incidents. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

Compensation paid in the 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 financial years in respect of claims for damage to property caused by fire and explosion in terrorist incidents amounted to £19·37 million, £29·07 million and £64·1 million respectively. The figures do not include applicants' fees and costs.

I hope this is helpful.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Rate Collection Agency in 1993-94.

Mr. Atkins: For 1993-94, the following performance targets have been set for the agency:—

1. To reduce rating debt to 1·83 per cent. of the gross collectable rate, excluding late assessments, by 31 March 1994.
2. To achieve a reduction of 2 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of collecting rates per hereditament.
3. To generate refunds to 96 per cent. of ratepayers so entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.
4. To process by 31 March 1994, 94 per cent. of applications for the incoming year received from existing housing benefit recipients before 15 March 1994.
5. To achieve a reduction of 1·8 per cent. in the real value of unit costs of processing housing benefit cases.
6. To assess 96 per cent. of housing benefit claims free of error.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide details of the key performance targets for 1993-94 which have been set for Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The key performance targets for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 which have been set for Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland are as follows:

to survey 30,484 house units in the continuous revision programme; to complete 800 data capture units representing 1,429 basic scale map sheets converted to digital format;
to update the digital topographical database with 90 per cent. of the surveyed change within seven days of receipt of the field data;
to dispatch within seven working days 90 per cent. of orders for folded and basic scale maps;
to reduce unit costs so that the weighted mean percentage reduction of selected representative activities is 2 per cent.;
to recover, from the supply of goods and services, 21 per cent. of the total costs incurred by the agency.

WALES

Local Authorities (Payment of Bills)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to encourage or require local authorities to pay their bills on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The prompt payment of bills by local authorities is a matter for them and I have no power to intervene. However, the Government expect the public sector generally to follow best practice and to pay its bills within the agreed credit period or, where no such period has been agreed, 30 days. The payment performance of Government Departments is regularly monitored and Government contracts now include a requirement for sub-contractors to be paid promptly.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to control the spread of hydatidosis in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office has been providing funds to Powys health authority since 1989 for a five-year public education campaign on hydatid disease. The disease is generally most prevalent in sheep farming areas and the aim of this campaign is to reduce the incidence of hydatid disease through increased public awareness and the encouragement of preventive measures. Total funding to the end of 1992-93 is £119,000. Resources have been set aside to fund the campaign during the current financial year. The effectiveness of this will be evaluated in September 1994. Decisions on the future direction of the hydatid disease campaign in Wales will be taken in light of the outcome of this evaluation.

Additionally, the communicable disease surveillance centre, Wales, is currently preparing a survey into the incidence of hydatid disease in humans in Wales for the period 1984 to 1992. We hope to have the results of this shortly.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the number of vacancies within each jobcentre area in Wales in each of the last four quarters.

Mr. David Hunt: All available vacancy figures can be accessed on-line by staff in the Library of the House.

European Farm Commissioners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 275, who represented his Department at the meeting of European Farm Commissioners on 26 and 27 April.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department was represented at the Agriculture Council of Ministers on 26 and 27 April by the head of the agricultural commodities, structures and general policy division.

Council Mortgages

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance has been given to local authorities as regards the gross rate of interest to be paid for by council mortgages.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the provisions of section 438 and schedule 16 of the Housing Act 1985, local authorities are obliged to set their mortgage interest rate at the higher of the "standard national rate" or the "local average rate".

A revised standard national rate of 8·01 per cent. was declared, and notified to authorities, on 26 February and came into effect on 1 March. On 2 March, the Local Authority Mortgage Interest Rate Determination 1993 was issued to authorities setting out a revised method of calculating the local average rate.

Employees' Qualifications

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of (a) employees and (b) the self-employed in Wales had (i) a higher education degree or equivalent, (ii) higher education experience below degree level, (iii) GCE A-level or the equivalent, (iv) O-level or the equivalent, (v) other forms of qualification and (vi) no qualifications in each year since 1984.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is available from the labour force survey and is included in the table.

[1] For the self-employed some Labour Force Survey estimates for Wales are not accurate enough to be published in the level of detail required. Some groups of qualifications have, therefore, been aggregated for the answer.
[2] Includes Degree and all other Higher Education Qualifications.
[3] Includes O-level and all other qualifications.

Historic Buildings Council

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the 36th annual report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 36th annual report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales has been published today. The report covers the financial year 1991-92 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people aged (a) 16 to 17 years, (b) 18 to 19 years and (c) 20 to 24 years were unemployed in each travel-to-work area in Wales in each of the last four quarters;

(2) what were the numbers and percentages of long-term unemployed people aged (a) 18 to 24 years, (b) 25 to 59 years and (c) 60 years or over within each travel-to-work area in Wales in each of the last four quarters;

(3) if he will publish figures showing the number of unemployed people by duration of unemployment within each county in Wales indicating the number who have been unemployed for (a) zero to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to 12 months and (d) 12 months or more.

Mr. David Hunt: All available unemployment claimant figures can be assessed on-line by the staff of the Library of the House.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) male and (b) female workers in Wales were in (i) full-time and (ii) part-time employment in each county in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures are available only for years when a census of employment was carried out and the results prior to 1981 are not comparable with later years. All available employment figures can be accessed on-line by staff in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 17 May Official Report, columns 57-58, how many people, and what percentage of all adults aged 16 years or over, were recorded by the 1991 census in Wales as economically inactive.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of adults in Wales aged 16 or over recorded as economically inactive by the 1991 census was 1,002,205. This represents 44·4 per cent. of the total resident population aged 16 or over.

HEALTH

Patient Records

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom (a) written and (b) computer notes on patients held by general practitioners belong.

Mr. Sackville: Ownership of records on patients maintained by general practitioners in accordance with their terms of service, is vested in family health services authorities.

Spastics Society

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives from the Spastics Society to discuss (a) the adoption of a disability income scheme and (b) reform of the tort system in dealing with claims of negligence against the medical profession.

Mr. Yeo: We have had no such meetings.

Drugs and Alcohol

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of all the monitoring information held by her Department on the funding of drug and alcohol services after 1 April.

Mr. Yeo: We expect to publish the findings of the monitoring exercise now being undertaken by Goldsmiths' college, including aggregated national data, when the exercise is completed at the end of July.

Limited List

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs to finish its deliberations on which products in each of the 10 new categories are to be placed on the selected list; and if she intends to publish their advice.

Dr. Mawhinney: The committee has been asked to complete its work by the end of the year. The committee's advice is confidential and will not be published.

Teenagers (Magazine Advice)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to encourage magazines for teenage girls to include moral as well as practical advice on sexual issues.

Mr. Sackville: It is important that discussion about sexual health matters has proper regard to moral considerations, the value of family life and the responsibilities of parenthood, and this is the approach set out in the Government's White Paper "The Health of the Nation". We hope that those responsible within the media for decisions about the content of magazines read by young people will bear this firmly in mind.

Doctors and Consultants (Suspensions)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing (a) how many doctors are currently suspended, (b) the breakdown of (a) in terms of gender and race and (c) the breakdown of (a) in terms of general practitioners and hospital doctors: and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Schools Health Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what directives she has given to district health authorities on the schools health service; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what steps she is taking to protect the schools health service, and to ensure a uniform standard of service throughout the country; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Health authorities are aware that, in their purchasing of health services for their local populations they must fulfil the duty under section 5 of the National Health Service Act 1977 to provide for the inspection and treatment of children at maintained schools—duties which may be extended to independent schools by arrangement with the school's proprietors. How they do so is a matter for local decision. With the increasing involvement of general practitioners and their primary care teams in child health surveillance, many school children receive the bulk of the health care they require from GPs as part of a comprehensive family practitioner service. It is therefore no longer appropriate to insist on a separate school health service responsible for all school children. We foresee a continuing need for some specialised services, particularly for children with special educational needs and for those not adequately covered by primary care. We intend to publish guidance on such provision within a good practice guide to child community health services.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the funding allocation for the schools health service for each year since 1985.

Mr. Yeo: Funding is provided through the general allocation for community health services. It is not possible to identify specific allocations to health services for school children.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) school nurses and (b) school medical officers were employed by each district health authority in each year since 1985.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Blood Donors

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what categories of person are prevented from donating blood for the national blood transfusion service.

Mr. Sackville: People wishing to donate blood but who consider themselves to be in the following categories are asked not to give blood:

- anyone who has AIDS, is HIV positive or thinks they may need an AIDS test
- anyone who has ever injected themselves with drugs
- any man who has ever had sex with another man
- anyone who has ever worked as a prostitute
- any man who has had sex with a woman he knows has AIDS or is HIV positive
- any woman who has had sex with a man she knows has ever had sex with another man
- anyone who has had sex with a man or woman who they know has ever injected themselves with drugs
- any woman who has had sex with a man who she knows has haemophilia.

People who consider themselves to be in the following categories are asked not to give blood if in the last two years they have had sex with:

- a male or female prostitute
- any man or woman of any race living in Africa—but not Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Libya or Egypt—or any man or woman who has had sex in the last two years with anyone living there.

Others may be deferred from giving blood, either permanently or for a period if

- they have had an infectious disease in the last two years, or if they have been in contact with an infectious disease in the last six months
- they have visited or lived abroad other than in Europe
- they have received any innoculations or vaccinations in the last six months or ever been treated with human growth hormone
- they have had any of the following: anaemia; asthma; brucellosis (undulant fever); cancer; diabetes; epilepsy (fits); glandular fever; hay fever; heart disease; high blood pressure; hospital admission; jaundice (including contact with a case during the past six months); kidney disease; malaria; stroke; tuberculosis.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Fuel (Transport)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to monitor the compliance with weight regulations of wagons used for the shipments of spent nuclear fuel sent to Sellafield from Germany; and which shipments he has checked for their compliance.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to her rail freight questions on 12 May, Official Report, column 462.

Scirocco

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken following the refusal of the Spanish authorities to permit, and the use of gunboats to prevent, the landing at Almeria of the British-registered vessel Scirocco.

Mr. Norris: We are continuing our efforts to resolve the matter. In our view, Cenargo is entitled to operate this service under European Community legislation on shipping liberalisation. We welcome the fact that the Spanish Government have conceded that there is no legal obstacle to Cenargo operating such a service.

Marine Emergencies Organisation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the future of the Marine Emergencies Organisation.

Mr. MacGregor: I have decided that the Marine Emergencies Organisation should be a candidate for executive agency status within my Department. I am confident that this will provide the MEO with the incentive and opportunity to enhance the well-regarded service it already provides. The necessary preparatory work is being put in hand for the organisation to become an agency on 1 April 1994.

East London Rail Study

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 1992, Official Report, columns 861-63, what further work has been undertaken on the options identified in the east London rail study phase 2.

Mr. Norris: I understand that work has focused on a Thames crossing between the royal docks and Woolwich and that a joint London Transport—London Docklands development corporation study has been looking at the local and more strategic impact of such a link. Improved access to London City airport by the docklands light railway and improved local links between the royal docks and Barking remain possibilities and will be the subject of further studies.

EDUCATION

Oxbridge College Fees

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what formulae are used for calculating the grants for college fees at Oxford and Cambridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 22 April, Official Report column 154. The changes in college fees at Oxford and Cambridge each year take account of the change in the average unit of public funding for student places in higher education. Discussions between the Department and representatives of the colleges on fee levels for the 1993-94 academic year are currently in progress.

"Testing: The Facts"

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost to public funds of the promotional package "Testing: The Facts"; and how widely it was distributed.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on Wednesday 19 May 1993 Official Report columns 170-71.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Alan Clark

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if Mr. Alan Clark was telephone tapped during his period in office as a Minister of the Crown.

The Prime Minister: The policy on the interception of the telephones of Members of Parliament remains as stated in 1966 by the then Prime Minister, the Lord Wilson of Rievaulx, and as applied by successive Governments since. In answer to questions on 17 November 1966, Lord Wilson said that he had given instructions that there was to be no tapping of the telephones of Members of Parliament and that, if there were a development which required such a change of policy, he would at such moment as seemed compatible with the security of the country, on his own initiative make a statement in the House about it. As I said in reply to a similar question by the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 29 June 1992 at column 375, the Government regard this undertaking as still applying to both postal and telephone interception.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Currency and Commodity Dealings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for requiring a full audit trail in currency and commodity dealings as a protection against fraud and price manipulation.

Mr. Nelson: Institutions regulated by the Bank and under the Financial Services Act must have adequate systems to control the regulated aspects of their business, including an adequate audit trail. Where these controls are inadequate, the regulators will take appropriate action. They will also investigate any evidence of fraud or malpractice. I have no proposals to change the present regulatory arrangements, but will keep the matter under review.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for requiring the total separation of dealing and fund management in currency and commodity markets.

Mr. Nelson: Separation in the functions of dealer and fund manager is not a regulatory requirement in these or other financial markets. The necessary safeguards to ensure that banks and financial institutions deal fairly for clients are matters for the Bank of England and the financial services regulators. Their judgment is that this can be achieved by having appropriate controls to satisfy regulatory requirements and by imposing a disclosure requirement, where appropriate. I have no proposals to change the present regulatory arrangements, but will keep the matter under review.

Trade Bank

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what requests the Bank of England has received from Mr. Sadiq Hassan Taha in regard to the establishment of a trade bank in London, since 1985.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England has sole responsibility for authorisation under the Banking Act 1987, and it is for the Bank to determine what information relating to possible applications for authorisation may be disclosed. Its ability to disclose any such information is constrained by the confidentiality provisions of the Act.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1970 and for each month since August 1992 the sterling effective exchange rate, as shown in table F1 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and currently, distinguishing the effective exchange rate for Organisation of European Economic Co-operation countries and the corresponding rate for non-OEEC countries together with the imports and exports of manufactures in each case as a percentage of money gross domestic product.

Mr. Nelson: The sterling effective exchange rate index which formerly appeared in table F1 of the Central Statistical Office's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" can still be found in up-to-date form in table 13.1 of "Financial Statistics", copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. Indices of the effective exchange rate for sterling relative to specific groups of countries are not available.

Information on trade in manufactures with individual countries and major groupings of countries is published in the CSO's business monitor MA20, available in the Library, and information on the gross domestic product is on the CSO database which can be accessed by the Library.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the increase in the terms of trade for manufactures since the second half of 1973 on the balance of payments for (i) semi-manufactures and (ii) finished manufactures in terms of 1992 prices and as a percentage of money gross domestic product; and if he will publish a table showing the relevant figures for each year since 1970 and, where relevant, in index form as a percentage of the second half of 1973.

Mr. Nelson: The terms of trade are only one of several influences on the balance and there is no simple and direct relationship between them. The latest information on the balance of trade in manufactures between 1970 and 1992 at current and constant prices, and on the gross domestic product, is available from the Central Statistical Office database which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he expects the figures for import and export prices of manufactures on trade with other EC countries to follow the same path (a) this year to date and (b) for the rest of the year as on trade with non-EC countries; what is his estimate of the effect that has had on the balance of payments this year to date; and what is his forecast for the rest of 1993.

Mr. Nelson: While there has been a correlation between movements in EC and non-EC trade prices over the past, prices for our non-EC trade are not necessarily an exact guide to prices for our trade with other EC countries. Figures for prices of our trade with other EC countries will be available in mid-June. The latest forecast of the balance of payments was published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Rents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage rents to consumers have increased since January 1987, measured by the retail prices index; and if he will publish a table (a) giving separate figures for the increase in public and private rents and their corresponding weights in the index in 1978, 1979, 1987 and to date and (b) showing the effect of rent increases on the real disposable incomes of council tenants not in receipt of housing subsidies or national assistance.

Mr. Nelson: Between January 1987 and March 1993, the latest date for which information is available, the "rents" section of the retail prices index rose by 70·9 per cent. Information on public and private sector rents is not available in the form requested.

In 1987, local authority tenants not in receipt of rent rebates, supplementary benefit, rates rebate and housing benefit supplement, had an average disposable income of £180 per week. In 1991, local authority tenants not in receipt of rent rebates, income support and rates rebate, had an average disposable income of £218 per week. The information was obtained from the 1987 and 1991 family expenditure surveys. Information on rent excluding rates is not available from the 1987 family expenditure survey.

"Monthly Digest of Statistics"

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the aggregate increase in prices in non-food items since 13 January 1987 for (a) the groups in table 18.2 of the April edition of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" and (b) table 18.1 for March; what is the reason for the difference between the two figures; what account was taken of foreign holidays in (i) the weights in both tables 18.1 and 18.2 and (ii) the averaging in table 18.2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The aggregate increase in prices in non-food items within the retail prices index since 13 January 1987 was 39·7 per cent. by 12 January 1993 and 40·8 per cent. by 16 March 1993. The difference between the two figures simply reflects changes in prices between January and March.

Foreign holidays were introduced into the RPI with effect from February 1993, following a recommendation of the RPI Advisory Committee, Cm 2142. Thus, while March 1993 edition of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" contains indices up to and including January 1993, with no foreign holidays component, the April 1993 edition contains indices up to March 1993, including the new foreign holidays component showing the movement compared to January 1993.

The foreign holidays component in the all-items RPI for 1993 has a weight of 30 parts per 1,000.

Changes in prices for the RPI are measured by comparing them to their levels in the previous January and then weighting them together using the latest weights for the current year to produce an overall average price change for each month. These average price changes are then linked with the figures for earlier years.

By "chain-linking" the calculations in this way, the index can both take account of changes in the make-up of household spending from year to year and provide comparisons between different years. This procedure ensures that if something is dropped from the index or introduced, the index is not distorted. Thus, the introduction of foreign holidays has not resulted in a discontinuity in the level of the index.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any officials of his Department have met third parties to discuss matters relating to the possible privatisation of the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Dorrell: From time to time, my officials meet bodies and organisations with interests in forestry.

Drugs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registered drug addicts there were in Wales in each year since 1987; and how many (a) registered heroin addicts, (b) new heroin addicts in each year, (c) cocaine addicts and (d) new cocaine addicts there were in each year.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table.

Drug addicts notified in Wales to the Home Office during the year 1987-91

Number of persons

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
All notified addicts	230	253	299	366	528
All heroin addicts	154	186	196	231	208
New heroin addicts	53	66	70	77	106
All cocaine addicts	8	13	20	17	12
New cocaine addicts	2	10	10	8	10

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on (a) the real street price after accounting for inflation and (b) the purity of hard drugs in the United Kingdom since 1987.

Mr. Jack: As drug dealing is an illegal and clandestine activity, it is not possible to obtain more than a very general indication of the street prices of drugs. Information obtained by the National Criminal Intelligence Service and set out in the table suggests that over the period 1987-92, the street prices of drugs such as heroin, cocaine and amphetamines have remained relatively steady.

Price per gramme

	Heroin	Cocaine	Amphetamine
1987	£75-90 (£102-122)[1]	£60-90 (£81-122)[1]	£10-20 (£14-27)[1]
1988	£80-100	£60-80	£10-15
1989	£70-90	£60-80	£10-15
1990	£60-90	£50-100	£12-15
1991	£50-100	£50-100	£12-15
1992	£50-100	£50-100	£10-15

[1] Expressed in 1992 prices.

The purity level of drugs as ascertained by scientific analysis will depend on at what point the sample is intercepted in the chain between dealers and misusers. Average street level purities for the period in question are contained in the table.

Percentages

	Heroin	Cocaine	Amphetamine
1987	33	56	11
1988	36	61	10
1989	39	48	7
1990	38	45	6
1992	42	48	6

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish figures showing the proportion of (a) heroin and (b) cocaine seized by (1) Customs and Excise and (2) other agencies within (i) the United Kingdom and its waters and (ii) Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The information relating to the proportion of heroin and cocaine seizures by weight in the United Kingdom made by Her Majesty's Customs and other agencies is given in the table. Information regarding amounts seized in Wales is not held separately.

Proportion of the weight of heroin and cocaine seized by Her Majesty's Customs, Police and other agencies, United Kingdom, 1987-91

United Kingdom — Percentages

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Heroin
Her Majesty's Customs	80·7	90·5	94·1	95·6	77·8
Police and other agencies	19·3	9·5	5·9	4·4	22·2
Cocaine
Her Majesty's Customs	89·1	82·6	85·5	91·9	98·4
Police and other agencies	10·9	17·4	14·5	8·1	1·6

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the total quantity and (b) the estimated street value of (i) heroin, (ii) cocaine, (iii) synthetic category A drugs and (iv) all category A drugs seized within (1) the United Kingdom and (2) Wales in each year from 1987.

Mr. Jack: The available information on the quantity of class A drugs seized in the United Kingdom is published in table 2.4 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on estimated street value is not collected centrally, and estimates of the quantity of controlled drugs seized are compiled only for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Child Deaths

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children are recorded as having suffered a violent death during the last five years; and in how many of these cases criminal proceedings were subsequently brought.

Mr. Jack: A total of 474 offences of homicide were initially recorded in England and Wales during the period 1987 to 1991 where the victim was a person under the age of 16 years; in 391 of these, criminal proceedings were brought. In the remaining 83 cases, there was one case where the suspect died, 59 cases where the suspect committed suicide, nine cases where no suspect has yet been found and 14 cases where proceedings were not initiated—for example, on the advice of the Crown prosecution service.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a resolution to the Council of Ministers to extend the European Commission's proposals for a data protection directive to personal data held by the police, immigration and national security services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government do not consider that the protection of data in these areas is a matter on which a Community-level initiative would be desirable.

Ecstasy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Ecstasy-related deaths occurred in the United Kingdom during 1992.

Mr. Jack: This information is not yet available.

Crimes Against Children

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what medical or psychiatric treatment is available for men convicted of indecent assault on or sexual abuse of children; and what plans he has for improvement in or extension of such treatment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Jean Corston, dated 19 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about medical or psychiatric treatment for men convicted of indecent assault on or sex abuse of children.

The treatment of sex offenders, including those who have committed offences against children, within the Prison Service falls into two broad categories, medical or educational, depending on whether the treatment consists of a form of psychotherapy or is based on a cognitive behaviourial approach.

For the former, in particular, facilities exist at HM Prison Grendon where there is a unit using a psychotherapeutic approach involving multi-disciplinary teams which are directed by a physician; the Wormwood Scrubs annex where therapy is conducted through group and one to one sessions involving psychiatrists, psychologists, probation, education and health care staff; and Glen Parva which provides similar programmes for young offenders.

Therapy or treatment is also provided at many establishments on an individual basis by visiting physicians or psychiatrists according to the clinical needs of the patient.

The second category of treatment is being facilitated by the Prison Service Sex Offender Programme which was introduced during 1992 and has been initially targeted at prisoners who receive sentences of four years or more, although there is scope for offenders who are serving shorter sentences but are deemed to be particularly dangerous to be put forward for the programme.

The programme, which is educational rather than medical in character, is divided into two main sub-programmes; a core programme, which tackles offenders' distorted beliefs about relationships, and an extended programme, for those who represent the greatest risk.

At present there are seven prisons acting as assessment centres, 13 providing core programmes and seven providing extended programmes. In addition, two establishments offer concentrated core programmes for high risk inmates serving less than four years.

For the future we plan to create additional capacity and increase the number of establishments providing the extending programme.

Probation Service (Partnership Plans)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many partnership plans have been formulated by probation services under section 97 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and how many include reparation and mediation services among their priorities for the coming three years.

Mr. Jack: Although we are still awaiting replies, the initial responses to the partnership decision document were encouraging, and give us reason to believe that most areas should be in a position to submit their initial plans by the 30 June deadline. This timing was endorsed by the National Partnership Forum and received the full support of the representative from the Association of Chief Officers of Probation, who was of the opinion that such a deadline would be acceptable to probation areas.

Unit Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the unit fine scheme on the number of people received into Prison Department establishments for fine defaults.

Mr. Jack: The data necessary to make such an assessment are not yet available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he gave to returning the unit fine system to (a) the unit values used in the four pilot projects or (b) some other values instead of the values currently in force.

Mr. Jack: Unit values in any unit fine scheme must be such as to allow the courts to impose fines at up to the maximum levels approved by Parliament. The maximum unit values in the four pilot projects reflected the then requirement to be able to achieve a maximum fine of £2,000. The increase in the maximum fine that can be imposed by a magistrates court to £5,000 means that it would not be feasible to change the current maximum unit value of £100 without making a corresponding change to the maximum number of units available to express the seriousness of an offence. Having looked carefully at the scheme, we concluded that changes in this area would not address the anomalous results that have arisen in certain cases. We therefore announced our intention to abolish the scheme.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) of 26 January, Official Report, column 685, if he will place in the Library the information collected by his Department on the operation of the unit fines system.

Mr. Jack: Statistical information about fines imposed since 1 October 1992 is still being collected. It will be published in due course in the usual way.

Police Mergers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received urging the merger of a police force in England and Wales with another since taking office; and how many have been received by his Department in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any representations urging the merger of a police force in England and Wales since taking office; nor have any such representations been received by this Department in the last three years. Details of correspondence from between three and five years ago could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Correspondence on this subject dating back over five years has been destroyed. It is normal departmental practice not to retain records dating back over five years unless they are considered to be of long-term significance.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement giving all the evidence available to him on which he based his decision to change the current procedure for amalgamation of police forces; and if he will place copies of all supporting papers and correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 May 1993]: My right hon. and learned Friend proposes to simplify the statutory procedure relating to the amalgamation of police forces because he thinks that, if any amalgamations under existing leglislation were to be considered, the procedures would lead to protracted delay and uncertainty for the police forces concerned and would be detrimental to police performance.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter sent to him on 4 March from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, regarding the letter about relatives of Abdullahi Mohammed, of 21 Tarporley Avenue, forwarded to him by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at the beginning of February.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 22 April 1993]: My right hon. and learned Friend wrote to the right hon. Gentleman today.

Fines (Non payment)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were sentenced to prison for failure to pay fines in the six-month periods beginning (a) April 1992 and (b) October 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 20 May 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of fine defaulters committed to custody in the six month periods beginning April 1992 and October 1992.

The latest available data relate to the 6 months from 1 March 1992 to 31 August 1992. During this period 9,329 fine defaulters (8,815 males and 514 females) were received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. More up to date information is available about the population of fine defaulters in Prison Service establishments; this was 533 persons (506 males and 27 females) on 31 March 1993, 256 persons (254 males and 2 females) on 30 September 1992 and 328 persons (308 males and 20 females) on 31 March 1992.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Sites

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken in response to the request made in the 22nd report of the Select Committee on European Legislation, HC79-xxii, of 10 March, in regard to explanatory memorandum 4140/93 on Euratom safeguards, for a fuller explanation of the background to and reasons for the expected increased costs for the safeguarding of United Kingdom nuclear sites and an assessment of the reaction of nuclear business interests to the proposals for the submission of detailed design information to be sought.

Mr. Eggar: A response to the request of the Select Committee on European Legislation in regard to explanatory memorandum 4140/93 will be made when the final text of the proposed amendment to Commission regulation (Euratom) No. 3227/76 is available.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future arrangements for the operation of his Department's environmental helpline at Warren Spring Laboratory following the announcement on 11 May of the closure of the laboratories.

Mr. Eggar: There has been no announcement about the future of Warren Spring Laboratory. My Department's environmental helpline service continues to be available to business callers on 0800 585 794.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances Glaxo plc will not have to pay the full agreed price to the Exchequer in respect of its acquisition of the site of the Warren Spring Laboratory at Welwyn.

Mr. Leigh: Glaxo Group Research Ltd. acquired the site of the Warren Spring Laboratory at Stevenage—not Welwyn—on 1 April 1992. The purchase price is payable in instalments, but there are no circumstances in which Glaxo will not have to pay the full agreed price.

Export Control Compliance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of his Department's publication on export control compliance have been published; to whom it has been distributed; and whom his Export Control Organisation consulted prior to preparing the documents.

Mr. Needham: Some 6,000 copies of the code of practice on export control compliance have been distributed to date. They have been sent to companies exporting controlled goods, and to trade associations, chambers of commerce and other trade bodies. The Export Control Organisation consulted a wide range of companies and trade organisations in preparing the code which reflects the best practice found in operation.

Energy Policy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the priorities of his Department in relation to energy policy for the remainder of 1993.

Mr. Eggar: Currently, the priorities for my Department in support of the Government's energy policy are to: decide on the structure and licensing arrangements appropriate to a privatised coal industry with a view to legislation being brought forward as soon as possible; complete the review of our renewable energy strategy; begin work on the Government's review of the future prospects for nuclear power; make awards following the 14th round of offshore licensing; appoint the energy advisory panel in preparation for the first annual energy report to be published next year; achieve agreement on a substantial energy charter treaty among all countries of the OECD, of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, and make further progress towards a single energy market in the Community.

Other priorities will no doubt arise as the year progresses.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in the manufactured imported content of United Kingdom exports since 1970.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 3 November 1992, Official Report, columns 142-43.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the increase in imports and exports of finished manufactures in (a) 1970-77, (b) 1977-79 and (c) since 1979.

Mr. Needham: The available information is given in the table.

Percentage changes in United Kingdom trade[1] in finished manufactures[2]

	Exports	Imports
1970-77	43·2	126·2
1977-79	−3·1	38·4
1979-92	72·1	150·4

[1] Exports and imports in volume terms.
[2] Finished manufactures are defined as divisions 7 and 8 of the Standard International Trade Classification, less erratics (ships, North sea installations and aircraft)

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in respect of how many parliamentary questions a substantive answer was not provided by his Department wholly or partly on the ground of disproportionate cost in each of the last 18 months (a) in total and (b) as a proportion of questions answered.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 May 1993]: The information requested is shown in the table.

1991
November	3	396	0·75
December	3	248	1·20

April	4	294	1·36
TOTAL	61	5,025	1·21

The table includes those questions answered by the Department of Energy between November 1991 and March 1992.

Energy Advisory Panel

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he will use in appointing members to the energy advisory panel.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 May 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 3.32 of "The Prospects for Coal", Cm 2235.

DEFENCE

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the decommissioning of the Merlin reactor at Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: Although the Merlin reactor was situated within the parish of Aldermaston, it was never part of the atomic weapons establishment. The reactor was owned and operated by Associated Electrical Industries, which subsequently became part of GEC. Consequently, its decommissioning is not a matter for my Department.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Aitken: Since the office of the Data Protection Registrar was established, 10 complaints have been received against the Ministry of Defence as follows:

Complaint Type	Number Received	Date Received
Principle 3	1	3 December 1990
Principle 5	2	9 November 1988
		14 June 1992
Principle 7	5	15 December 1987
		21 March 1988
		21 November 1988
		24 August 1989
		8 August 1990
Principle 8	1	3 November 1989
Section (5) 1	1	2 April 1990

None of these cases required any significant remedial action by this Department.

Bosnia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence British forces serving in Bosnia-Herzegovina have reported of Croat forces wearing nazi uniforms or swastika badges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British combat aircraft currently enforcing the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina are also engaged in the reconnaissance of possible future ground targets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from British forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina on fighting between Croat and Muslim forces since 17 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) on 30 April, Official Report, column 591.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which (a) RAF and (b) foreign aircraft were used (i) to return personnel of the Cheshire Regiment from Bosnia to Germany and (ii) to fly out personnel of the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment; why foreign aircraft were used; at what cost; whether foreign military aircrew were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Hercules C-130 aircraft and Ilyushin 8, Boeing 737 and Airbus 320 aircraft belonging to Saarland and Berlin Air and contracted by the German Government were used to effect the changeover of our battalion group in Bosnia. No German military aircrew were involved. The German Government last year offered UNPROFOR troop contributors, on a bilateral basis, practical assistance in supporting their contingents in Bosnia. The German offer took the form of services they could provide, rather than direct financial assistance. The savings made from taking up the German Government's offer of assistance is estimated at £179,000.

HMS Avenger

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 573, what specific effect the fleet's commitments in the Adriatic had on the decision that HMS Avenger should return directly to the United Kingdom from the south Atlantic rather than via the Pacific; and what was the difference between the two plans in the projected dates of her return to port.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In allocating the fuel available to the Fleet in 1993-94, priority has been given to operational tasks, including the commitment in the Adriatic, with the result that plans for some other activities, including HMS Avenger's visit to Chile, have had to be changed. HMS Avenger will arrive back in the United Kingdom 33 days earlier than was originally planned.

No-fly Zone

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his statement of 1 April, Official Report, column 505, if the costs of enforcing the no-fly zone under Security Council resolution 816 will be met by the United Nations or from national defence budgets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Costs will be met by participating nations. In the case of the United Kingdom, they will be charged to the defence budget.

Fourth Frigate Flotilla

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 573, what was the budget in 1992-93 for fuel costs for the fourth frigate flotilla; what was spent; what is the budget in 1993-94; how much has been spent to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

£ thousands

	Allocation	Spend
1992-93	4,421	3,316

[1] Up to 30 April 1993.

The lower spend than allocation in 1992-93 reflects efficiency measures and reassessments of fleet activities. The lower allocation in the current financial year reflects expected continuing improvements in efficiency, the reduction in size of the fourth frigate squadron and different fleet activity priorities from the previous year.

Guns

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned peacetime establishment of the five artillery regiments to be equipped with the AS90 self-propelled gun; what is the present establishment of an artillery regiment equipped with 150 mm Abbot or M109 guns; how many of the guns in each battery will be manned in peacetime; when the decision was taken not to man complete batteries in peacetime; when and how it was announced; how the batteries will be brought up to full strength; what are the annual manpower and related savings of partial manning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to disclose details of unit establishments.

Army Personnel Office

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what capital value was ascribed to Kentigern house, Glasgow in arriving at the comparative costs of provision of the new Army personnel office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government already own Kentigern house, and therefore its capital value was not a factor taken into account in determining the cost of the Army personnel centre. The investment appraisal was carried out in accordance with Her Majesty's Treasury guidelines in these matters and the opportunity cost of utilising space in Kentigern house for the Army personnel centre rather than for other purposes was included. This showed Kentigern house to be the most cost-effective solution.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Protocols (Ratification)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ratify the 1 and 2 optional protocols to the international covenant on civil and political rights and the 6 optional protocol to the European convention on human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to ratify these optional protocols. We believe that the European convention on human rights—ECHR—provides individuals with a stronger means of redress than they would have under the first optional protocol to the international covenant on civil and political rights—ICCPR. With regard to the second optional protocol to the ICCPR and the sixth optional protocol to the ECHR, we believe that the abolition or reintroduction of the death penalty is an issue of conscience which should be decided by a free vote of Parliament.

Royal Family (Visits)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the breakdown by category of expenditure by his Department in the latest available year on overseas visits by the royal family at the request of Government Departments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The cost to the Department to date of overseas visits undertaken by members of the royal family at the request of Government Departments during the financial year 1992-93 is £453,300, broken down as follows:

The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh	157,100
The Prince and the Princess of Wales	133,200
Other members of the royal family	163,000

Regional Aid

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the maximum ceilings for regional state aid for each of the member states of the EC.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The maximum ceilings for regional state aids for each of the member states are laid down by the European Commission in its communication on the method for the application of article 92(3) (a) and (c) to regional aid—Official Journal C 212 of 12 August 1988. Within each member state, the permitted rate of assistance may vary within this ceiling depending on the kind, intensity or urgency of the regional problems the assistance is designed to combat.

	Percentage
Belgium	25
Denmark	30
France	[1]25
Germany	23
Greece	75
Italy	[1]15
Ireland	75
Luxembourg	25
The Netherlands	20
Portugal	75
Spain	[1]45
United Kingdom	[1]30

[1] Some areas of these countries are designated as article 92(3) (a) EEC areas—where the standard of living is abnormally low or where there is serious underemployment—and, as such, are permitted aid intensity of up to 75 per cent.

EC Legislative Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the Commission's legislative programme for 1993, "COM (93)43 Final" published on 3 February; and what is his policy towards the proposal to change the scope of Euratom safeguards as set out in paragraph 244 of the programme.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The contents of the Commission's legislative programme have been received and noted. Her Majesty's Government do not respond formally to the Commission's programme. The only reference in the legislative programme to Euratom safeguards is contained in annex III under the section entitled "promoting sustainable, environment-friendly growth", and relates to the amendment of regulation (Euratom) 3227/76 to strengthen international safeguards. Initial proposals for these changes were described in explanatory memorandum 4140/93, a copy which has been placed in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the aid and assistance schemes made available to the Croat Government since independence.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have provided a total of £60,000 in the form of direct bilateral assistance to the Croatian Government. This was used to assess the damage and make urgent recommendations for remedial repairs to the Peruca dam which was in danger of collapse. The United Nations and the EC have provided various forms of assistance in Croatia but comprehensive figures setting out their expenditure are not readily available.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the new initiative launched by his Department to alleviate physical and psychological hardship among Bosnian women will be extended to all women in Bosnia-Herzegovina irrespective of ethnic origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 May 1993]: A programme of assistance to traumatised women in Bosnia-Herzegovina is being started by the United Kingdom-based non-governmental organisation Marie Stopes International. We are providing financial support for this project together with the European Commission, a number of other EC member states and the United Nations.

The project will be based in four centres in Bosnia from where it will operate outreach health and counselling teams. The locations have been chosen on the basis of security, logistics and need. They will provide assistance to traumatised and abused women irrespective of their ethnic origins.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the application of sanctions on fuel supplies to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia is having on the provision of humanitarian aid by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Belgrade to the people of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 May 1993] There were initial concerns in UNHCR that the rapid imposition of further sanctions against Serbia would delay the supply of humanitarian relief supplies to Bosnia-Herzegovina. However, the United Nations sanctions committee has taken steps to ensure that all shipments of humanitarian supplies are authorised and proceed without delay.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about the Overseas Development Administration since April 1989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since April 1989, the Foreign Affairs Committee has published 21 reports, containing recommendations about the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration. The Government's responses have been placed in the Library of the House.

Desertification

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the policy of the United Kingdom Government on negotiations to agree an international convention to combat desertification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are participating in the negotiations. Our view is that the convention should provide a framework for effective national programmes of action concentrating on the principal causes of land degradation.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries to which assistance is given through the know-how fund; and if he will state the sums involved in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 May 1993]: The countries receiving assistance through the know-how fund, including those to which specific pledges have been made, are:

Poland
Pledge of £50 million over 5 years, commencing 1989-90 and £15 million for the Agricultural Development Fund;

Hungary
Pledge of £25 million over five years, commencing 1989-90;

Czech Republic, Slovak Republic: Pledge of £30 million over 5 years, commencing 1990-91;

Romania, Bulgaria, Albania and Slovenia

Russia, Ukraine, Belarus, Moldova, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and the countries of the Transcaucasus and Central Asia: Pledge of £100 million over five years, commencing 1991-92.

A further £60 million of bilateral aid for Russia was announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in April 1993.

We are also committed to spending £5 million on environmental projects in the region in the period 1992-95.

In 1993-94, we also expect to contribute £48·7 million to the European bank for reconstruction and development and £131 million to the European Community's PHARE and TACIS programmes. Total British assistance to eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union in financial year 1993-94 is likely to exceed £232 million.

Population and Development Conference

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the British delegation to the preparatory committee meeting for the International Conference on Population and Development 1994 held in New York on 20 and 21 May had practical experience of family planning and population aid programmes; and what organisations they represented.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 May 1993]: Three members of the British delegation have such practical experience. They represent the Overseas Development Administration, the United Kingdom Family Planning Association and Population Concern, a non-governmental organisation.

SCOTLAND

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 408, how much of the total savings of £150,000 was retained by each fund holding practice; and on what these sums were spent.

Mr. Stewart: I have written to the hon. Lady to correct an error in my original answer of 11 May where the figure for the total savings of GP fund holder practices should have read "£190,000" rather than "£150,000".

The savings of individual GP fund-holding practices for 1991-92 are shown in the audited annual accounts of the individual GP fund-holders, which are public documents.

These savings, which are administered by the health board may only be applied in accordance with regulations, and with board agreement for the benefit of the fundholders patients. The specific details of the individual practice expenditure involved is a matter for the relevant health board.

Employment Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were participating in (a) employment training, (b) employment action, (c) the enterprise allowance scheme and (d) youth training in each month since December 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information on numbers of people participating in employment training, employment action, the enterprise allowance scheme and its successors, and youth training in Scotland in each month since December 1991, based on the latest information available, is set out in the table.

Renewable Energy

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to lay the Scottish renewable energy obligation order.

Mr. Lang: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 21 April, Official Report, column 113.

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all Forestry Commission land holdings over 1,000 acres, giving their name, county, Ordnance Survey grid reference and size.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 May 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 May 1993, Official Report, column 487, in response to his request for a list of all Forestry Commission land holdings over 1,000 hectares. A further list of Forestry Commission holdings over 1,000 acres could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 170, if he will make it his policy to refuse any appeal made against a planning decision relating to opencast coal until the new natural planning policy guideline on land for mineral workings is promulgated.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend is bound by statute to receive and determine all appeals, which have been properly and timeously lodged under the appropriate planning statute, having regard to the provisions of the relevant development plan and any other material considerations.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indemnify local authorities against legal costs of defending appeals against planning decisions which are upheld subject to prior discussion between the local authority and the Scottish Office.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no powers to indemnify local authorities in relation to costs; in planning proceedings, including appeals, parties are expected to meet their own expenses. Where one of the parties applies at the appropriate stage in the proceedings, expenses may be awarded on the ground of unreasonable behaviour by another party which resulted in unnecessary expenses being incurred.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with COSLA on the level of legal costs incurred by local authorities regarding appeals against planning decisions.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with COSLA on this matter.

Hedges (Salt Spray)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has made of the effect of salt spray on roads such as the A68 insidiously killing hedges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 May 1993]: The roads directorate of the Scottish Office Industry Department has not undertaken any such specific study and is unaware of any evidence of damage to hedges.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tenants (Property Purchase)

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures per council of the range of cash incentives available to council tenants to purchase a property in the private sector.

Mr. Baldry: Section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 empowers local authorities to operate a cash incentive scheme to give grants to their tenants to help them obtain other accommodation by buying or leasing a home. These schemes are a valuable and cost-effective way of securing vacancies for reletting to homeless people.

The table lists schemes approved by the Department to date for 1993-94 and gives the range of grant payable under each scheme.

Waste Water Treatment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the water companies concerning costs expected to be incurred by water companies in implementing the EC urban waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Maclean: The water companies, through the Water Services Association and individually, have made known their views and are continuing to refine their estimates of costs. The Department aims to meet the obligations of the directive in an economical and efficient manner.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the policy underlying, and the estimated impact of, the restructuring of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, as announced on 29 April.

Mr. Maclean: HMIP has undergone an internal restructuring aimed at consolidating the organisational, management and cultural changes brought about by the implementation of integrated pollution control. It is part of the continuing development of the inspectorate as a performance-driven, customer-aware and value-for-money organisation.

The reorganisation will enable the management and staff of HMIP to focus their efforts better on delivering the inspectorate's key objectives more efficiently and effectively and, thereby, to provide an enhanced service to industry and the public.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department gave the European Commission in its compilation on the annex on the United Kingdom to its report "Com. (93) 28 Final-Volume 12" on implementation of EC directive 85/337/EEC, published on 2 April.

Mr. Baldry: The Government were among those consulted.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what independent measures exist in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other member states of the European Community to review the adequacy and effectiveness of environmental impact statements prepared, pursuant to EC directive 85/337/EEC.

Mr. Baldry: The requirements of EC directive 85/337 have been introduced into member states' law in several different ways. In the United Kingdom, the local planning authority or other competent authority is required to take the environmental information, which includes the environmental statement, into consideration in deciding whether to grant development consent. Planning authorities have powers to require the applicant to provide further information concerning any of the matters set out in schedule 3 to the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 or to produce evidence to verify information in the environmental statement.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many British individuals or organisations have complained to the European Commission in regard to alleged breaches of EC directive 85/337/EEC on environmental impact assessments since it came into force; how many have been upheld; and if he will make a statement on the impact of the directive to date.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is not notified of all complaints to the EC by British individuals and organisations and current figures are not therefore available to the Government. However, I refer the hon. Member to the Commission's report dated 2 April 1993 on the implementation of directive 85/337—COM 93(28)—which has been deposited in the House and which gives numbers of complaints for the period 1988-90. It is not known how many were from British individuals or organisations. To date, no cases have been brought against the British Government in the European Court of Justice concerning the implementation or application of directive 85/337.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on European Commission proposals "COM (92)93 Final" and "COM (93)131 Final" for a convention on environmental impact assessment in a transboundary context.

Mr. Baldry: EC proposals COM (92)93 and COM (93)131 concern a proposal to facilitate simultaneous ratification by the European Community and the individual member states of the convention on environmental impact assessment in a transboundary context which was adopted at Espoo on 25 February 1991. Explanatory memoranda have been submitted to Parliament and have been placed in the Library of the House. The Government welcome the convention which the United Kingdom signed on 26 February 1991 and support the principle of simultaneous ratification.

Grounds Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities in awarding grounds maintenance contracts were reported to his Department in 1992; and what action was taken as a result.

Mr. Robin Squire: An analysis of all anti-competitive cases received by the Department in 1992 is to be carried out during the summer. I will write to my hon. Friend before the recess with the results in respect of ground maintenance cases.

During the first four months of 1993, 32 new anti-competitive complaints involving ground maintenance work were received. As at the end of April, four statutory notices have been served; in 17 cases we have decided not to proceed to statutory action; and the remainder are under consideration.

Recycling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent permissions have been given to local authorities for implementing recycling plans.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 245 recycling plans have now been cleared by the Department as complying with the necessary statutory requirements. Once a local authority has been given the go ahead, it should publicise the plan and make it available to the local community.

I have placed in the Library of the House a list of the local authorities which have had their plans cleared.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local government authorities have implemented policies to achieve the recycling of glass, paper, and metal cans; and what incomes were achieved in the latest year available.

Mr. Maclean: According to the recycling plans submitted by local authorities in England, glass is collected for recycling in 91 per cent. of waste collection authorities, paper is collected in 81 per cent. of authorities and metal cans are collected in 60 per cent. of authorities. Each plan should provide information about the future costs and savings attributable to the proposals in the plan, but the nature of incomes achieved will vary from one authority to another and are not presented on a comparable basis.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the approximate volume of glass, paper and metal cans recycled for future use during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: In 1992, approximately 459,000 metric tonnes of glass; 3,086,000 metric tonnes of paper; and over 80,000 metric tonnes of metal cans were recycled for future use.

Climate Change Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the matters addressed and agreed at the conference on climate change held in London on 7 May.

Mr. Maclean: The conference's focus was how the United Kingdom should meet its commitment of returning CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by 2000. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State was pleased that many participants at the conference welcomed the open consultative process adopted, which encouraged the partnership approach that is the key to developing a cost-effective CO_2 programme, and were keen to consider what they could contribute. In his speech to the conference, he accepted the argument put by many of those who have taken part in the consultations that only Governments could provide the basic legislative and fiscal framework for our programme, within which others could act.

A report of the conference will be published next month and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Conveniences

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has commissioned of the environmental and pollution consequences of a reduction in the number of public conveniences and an increase in the incidence of sleeping rough.

Mr. Baldry: None, although as part of independent research into the effectiveness of the first phase—1990-93—of the Government's £96 million rough sleepers initiative, a count undertaken by voluntary organisations last November found that the number of people sleeping rough in central London had fallen to around 420, down by more than a half from estimates of over 1,000 before the initiative began.

Indo-British Environmental Initiative

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the Indo-British environmental initiative agreed with the Indian Minister for Environment and Forests on 21 April.

Mr. Maclean: I have arranged for a copy of the text of the Indo-British initiative agreed between my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, and Mr. Kamal Nath, Indian Minister for Environment and Forests, to be placed in the Library.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had in the European Council of Ministers on the time scale for the phasing out of the production of substances damaging the ozone layer.

Mr. Maclean: I have been pressing the European Commission to submit proposals for an EC regulation on ozone-depleting substances as soon as possible, and for it to contain stricter controls on hydrochlorofluorocarbons and methyl bromide than those in the Copenhagen amendment to the Montreal protocol.

Planning Consents (Revocation)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the details of the instances in 1991 when he used his revocation powers on a planning consent.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 17 May 1993, Official Report, column 60.

Water and Sewerage Charges

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage (a) the retail prices index and (b) water and sewerage charges to consumers have increased since January 1987; to what extent the level of water and sewerage charges are determined by the Government; and if he will publish a table showing the increase in real earnings since April 1987 of those employed in the industry compared with the corresponding increase for full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Maclean: The percentage increase in the RPI from January 1987 to March 1993 was 39·3 per cent. The percentage increase in average household water and sewerage bills from the 1986-87 charging year to 1992-93 was 85 per cent. Under legislation, increases in water and sewerage charges are limited by the Secretary of State under his decisions in 1989 or under subsequent decisions by the Director General of Water Services. Within these overall limits, water and sewerage companies can apportion tariffs for different services, so long as they do not discriminate between customers or classes of customer. Relevant information on comparative earnings is available from the new earnings survey, copies of which are in the Library.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the remit of the Local Government Commission for England includes considering proposed unitary authorities based on a combination of parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Robin Squire: No, although the Local Government Commission may recommend unitary authorities of any size within each review area.

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average increase in rents for (a) council tenants, (b) housing association tenants and (c) private tenants with regulated tenancies in each of the past three years; and what were the comparable figures in the retail prices index, average earnings and the average value of houses in England.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the percentage changes in average rent levels in the last three years is set out in the table. The table also gives the corresponding changes in the retail prices index, average earnings and average house prices. Figures refer to England unless otherwise stated.

Per cent.

Council tenants[1]	+15	+15	+11
Registered rents[2]
Housing association tenants	+12	+9	+11
Other tenants	+15	+10	+13
RPI[3]	+9	+6	+4
Average earnings[4]	+10	+8	+6
Average house prices	−2	−2	−5

[1] The percentages given are the annual changes in average rents for the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93.
Figures for average local authority rents are not available for calendar years.
[2] The percentages given are for changes in the levels of those rents registered in the year rather than in average rents for all tenants with registered rents.
[3] United Kingdom figures.
[4] Great Britain figures.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were directly employed by each local authority in England and Wales for each year since 1978.

Mr. Squire: Numbers employed by each local authority in England and Wales from 1979 have been published in the joint staffing watch press releases. These are available in the Library of the House. Information about the numbers employed, by local authority, before 1979 is not available.

Landfill Methane Emissions

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the United Kingdom methane emissions arise from landfill gas; what information he has about future trends of landfill methane emissions; and whether he will issue a plan to return total United Kingdom emissions of methane to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 11 May 1993, Official Report, column 366.

Surrey Heath Borough Council

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of council tax in the Surrey Heath borough council; and what is the level of revenue support grant.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average headline band C council tax for two adults in Surrey Heath is £472. The revenue support grant entitlement for Surrey Heath borough council itself in 1993-94 is £767,000.

Community Charge

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much community charge was outstanding to local authorities on 31 March; and if he will give details of the amount outstanding to each local authority.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 4 May 1993, c. 39]: I estimate that the level of community charge arrears for local authorities in England at 31 March 1993 was £2·4 billion. Authorities have, however, made provision for non-collection of £1·6 billion.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 24 May 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Defender Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has for a public defender service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he has on the average duration of court cases involving claims for compensation for medical negligence affecting children born with disabilities, during each year since 1987.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps have been undertaken by his Department to date to speed up the process of dealing with claims for compensation for medical negligence in the courts affecting children born with a disability.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Over the last two years a number of jurisdictional, procedural and administrative changes have been introduced with the aim of reducing delay in case progress. These were not designed specifically for medical negligence cases, but such cases will have benefited from new regulations which include the early exchange of more information, including medical reports and other witness' evidence, serving proceedings within four rather than 12 months and allowing courts to deal with the question of liability in advance of the question of quantum.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about his Department since April 1989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Of those Select Committee reports which have been wholly or significantly addressed to my Department, the 21st report of the Committee of Public Accounts for the Session 1991-92, on expenditure on criminal legal aid, made eight conclusions and recommendations, which were in general accepted. The third report of the Home Affairs Select Committee—HASC—for the Session 1992-93, on domestic violence, made 42 recommendations some of which were wholly or in part directed at the Lord Chancellor's Department. The fifth report of that Committee, "Legal Aid: The Lord Chancellor's Proposals", made 10 recommendations. The Government have not yet responded to either of the HASC reports.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flood Defence Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what date the current term of office on National Rivers Authority regional flood defence committees expires for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the National Rivers Authority and local authority appointments, respectively;

(2) on what date the current period of service on National Rivers Authority local flood defence committees expires for the appointees of regional committees and local authorities.

Mr. Curry: The appointment to regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are due to expire on 30 June 1994. Information about the end dates of appointments to these committees by other bodies is not held centrally, but, according to the NRA, its appointments are due to end on 31 August 1994 and in a majority of regions those for local authorities are due to end on 31 May 1993.

The end dates for appointment to local flood defence committees vary in different regions and, according to information provided by the NRA, range from 31 May 1993 to 30 June 1994.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what written guidance or instructions he has given to the chairmen of National Rivers Authority regional flood defence committees regarding the experience and interests of the appointments made to local flood defence committees under section 13 of the Water Resources Act 1991; and if he will place a copy in the Library;

(2) what written guidance or instructions he has given to the levy-paying local authorities on the financial, commercial or personal interests of the members whom they appoint to regional flood defence committees of the National Rivers Authority; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Curry: The broad criteria to be taken into account in appointing members to regional or local flood defence committees are set out in sections 10(4) and 13(6) of the Water Resources Act 1991. Schedule 4 to that Act sets out more detailed provisions regarding the membership and proceedings of the committees, including declarations of interests. While the NRA and local councils are encouraged to appoint members representing a broad range of local interests, no supplementary written guidance or instructions have been issued.

Departmental Officials

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many offcials were employed by his Department to administer, inspect, regulate and advise the fishing industry either directly, in agencies or on special contracts (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest available date; how many professional fishermen are in full or part-time employment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many officials were employed by his Department to administer, inspect, regulate and advise the farming industry either directly, in agencies or on special contracts (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest available date; how many farmers are engaged in full or part-time professional farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Information on the numbers of staff in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, its agencies and the Intervention Board is set out in the "Ministry's Departmental Report on the Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96" which was issued in February, and which is available in the Library of the House. Although it is not possible to isolate the staff resources devoted to the specific activities listed by my hon. Friend, the report does contain detailed information on the functions performed by the Ministry and the resources consumed. Numbers of fishermen are set out on page 38 of the report, and numbers of farmers are set out in the latest version of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom"—also in the Library.

EC Beef (West Africa)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about supplies of EC beef in west Africa.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 19 May, Official Report, column 174.

Seismic Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the report into the effects of seismic surveys in shallow waters on (a) fish in general and (b) bass stocks and spawning grounds.

Mr. Curry: A study was made of the movements of bass in shallow waters during and after the seismic survey which was undertaken in Poole bay last year. The preliminary report of this work will be available this summer. The area in question does not include any bass spawning grounds.

Beef Imports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportions of United Kingdom beef consumption are imported from sources in Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, Venezuela, Chile and Peru.

Mr. Curry: The proportion of beef consumed in the United Kingdom in 1992 imported as fresh, chilled or frozen beef from Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay was 1·3 per cent. No beef was imported from Venezuela, Chile or Peru.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost to date and the expected future cost of his Department's market-testing programme; how many staff are engaged full-time in work relating to market testing; which firms of consultants have been used in connection with the market-testing programme; and how they were selected.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost of market testing in the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies and Her Majesty's Stationery Office and the Central Office of Information from November 1991 to date have been £916,000. The estimated cost for the remainder of the current financial year is £1,102,000. There are eight staff currently engaged full-time on market testing.

The consultants who have been used by OPSS, its Agencies, HMSO or COI in connection with the market testing programme, and the method of their selection, is as follows:

CDL Associates (competitive tender)
Chris Goodall Associates (competitive tender)
DMW (competitive tender)
Ernst & Young (competitive tender)
Ernst & Young (call-off contract)
OSI (competitive tender)
PA Consulting (competitive tender)
Price Waterhouse (competitive tender)
Shreeveport (single tender)
Symonds Facilities Management (competitive tender)
Touche Ross (competitive tender)

ENVIRONMENT

Polar Bears, Chessington

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were held with his Department about the sale and removal of the polar bears, Bonnie and Clyde, from Chessington world of adventure to a zoo in Zagreb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: An application to export the two bears to Zagreb zoo was lodged with the Department in January. The rules governing such exports are set out in EC regulation 3626/82 which implements the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora throughout the European Community.

The application was considered very carefully, in conjunction with our scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. It was decided that export should be allowed and the appropriate permit was issued on 28 January.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about compulsory competitive tendering for white collar services.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's answer on 10 November, Official Report, column 743, and to my answer on 19 April Official Report, column 42.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Howard: My Department was notified in November 1991 that the Data Protection Registrar was investigating a complaint made against the Department in relation to the disclosure of personal data held under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The outcome of the investigation is awaited.

Redundant Refrigerators

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of redundant refrigerators retrieved for the extraction of chlorofluorocarbon gas during the last full year.

Mr. Maclean: The Department does not hold these figures. However, we are keen to promote CFC recovery and encourage local authorities to set up recovery schemes. We gave priority to schemes for CFC recovery when distributing supplementary credit approvals for investment in recycling facilities for 1993-94. Twenty-six schemes have been allocated SCAs for 1993-94.

Nichols Institute Diagnostics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the prosecution of the Nichols Institute Diagnostics for breach of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution prosecuted Nichols Institute Diagnostics for breaches of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 on its premises at Newport, Essex. At the hearing at Saffron Walden magistrates court on 6 April 1993, the company pleaded guilty to four charges of accumulation of radioactive waste without authorisation, holding radioactive material without a certificate of registration and exceeding the limit for holdings in their registration. The company was fined £10,000 and ordered to pay full prosecution costs of £2,726.

Environmental Networks

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department provided to the National Council for Voluntary Organisations in the preparation of its recent report on the establishment of environmental networks.

Mr. Maclean: The report on the establishment of environmental networks has been produced as part of an environmental project undertaken by the National Council for Voluntary Organisations and supported by the Department's environmental action fund. The NCVO received £44,000 in 1992-93 towards the project and a sum of £52,000 has been offered to it in 1993-94.

Lambeth Services

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has received from the London borough of Lambeth in relation to the five notices serviced on Lambeth on 24 March under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will take into account the quality of service currently being given in relation to refuse collection in the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Robin Squire: The London borough of Lambeth has made an interim response to the notices served on the authority on 24 March. It has requested an extension of time until 4 June 1993 to make a considered final response, and this has been granted. My right hon. and learned Friend, in deciding whether to take further statutory action, will take into account all the relevant information put before him, including the authority's response.

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the number of hours worked and (b) the total amount of money earned by each chairperson of the non-departmental public bodies appointed by him and his predecessors in each year since 1987.

Mr. Howard: Information about the remuneration of chairmen appointed to non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible is contained in the annual HMSO publication "Public Bodies". Copies for each year since 1987 are available in the Library of the House. Information on the numbers of hours worked in each year since 1987 is not held centrally.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives he has planned to encourage the involvement of children in environmental protection.

Mr. Maclean: On 29 April my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced an initiative to encourage children to protect the environment. The first project will be a summer competition to select participants for a children's summit in Manchester on 18 September. The summit will discuss future projects for the campaign. Every competition entrant will receive an environmental summer activity pack. My Department also supports a number of projects involving children through the environmental action fund.

Negative Equity

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the number of households where the value of the property is less than the amount of the mortgage.

Sir George Young: Based on changes in house prices measured by the Department's house price index, the number of owner occupiers with mortgages larger than the value of their properties in the first quarter of 1993 is estimated to be about 1 million, the same as in the previous quarter.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek a derogation from EC measures implementing the terms of the Montreal agreement banning CFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 May 1993]: Under the EC regulation on ozone-depleting substances, CFC production and consumption will be phased out by 1 Janauary 1995, subject to any exemptions for essential uses which may be agreed. My Department issued a consultation paper on possible exemptions in March, and we are now considering carefully the bids we have received.

We have no plans to seek derogations from the regulation. We may have nominations for continued production for essential uses.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the scheme used in calculating the transitional council tax reduction for 1992-93 for each local authority in England;

(2) if he will publish the amount of other adjustments which formed part of the personal community charge in 1992-93 for each local authority in England;

(3) if he will publish the amount of the collection fund deficit at the most recent available date for each local authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 21 May 1993]: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

County Councils

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the Isle of Wight, Cornwall, Somerset and each county council where no political party has overall control, (a) the population, (b) the capital budget for 1993-94 and (c) the revenue budget for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The available information is as follows:

Liberal-Democrat controlled county councils

	Total population[1]	Total capital budget 1993-94 £ million	Total revenue budget 1993-94[2] £ million
Isle of Wight	126,593	9·018	78·453

Notes:
n.a. = information not yet returned by the authority.
[1] Resident population at 30 June 1991 (provisional estimate, as used in the 1993-94 Settlement).
[2] Net revenue expenditure as returned by authorities on the Budget Requirement (BR) return.

Minerals Planning Guidance

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation draft on the review of MPG 3; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 May 1993]: I intend to publish the consultation draft of the revised MPG 3 as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if civil service (a) terms and conditions and (b) codes of conduct apply to special advisers attached to Ministers in Government.

The Prime Minister: Special advisers have generally the same conditions of service as other civil servants, except that their salaries are negotiated individually in relation to previous earnings and are confidential. Different arrangements apply to severance pay. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 30 points.

Special advisers are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, with the exception of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments after resignation or retirement and certain aspects of the rules on political activities.

European Parliament (Elections)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding the de Gucht report on elections to the European Parliament.

The Prime Minister: We are ready to discuss the issue in Council when the presidency decides to table the report. If the council were to reach a consensus, which remains to be seen, it would certainly need to respect different national traditions. We acknowledge the attempt made by the de Gucht report to take these considerations into account.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will sympathetically consider any request to meet representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Studies so far have shown that the incidence of death and malignant disease has been no greater among British nuclear test veterans than among the general population. If, however, the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association has any new evidence to change the position, I should be pleased to examine it and will readily consider any subsequent request for a meeting in that light.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Prime Minister if he wil list the correspondence he has received about the British Coal staff superannuation scheme.

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations on a wide range of coal issues.

Crossrail

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all those organisations and companies, other than the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance, from which he has received recent representations concerning the crossrail project.

The Prime Minister: I have received representations in recent weeks from the following organisations and companies:

Aylesbury Vale District Council
Buckinghamshire County Council
Grosvenor Estates
London Chambers Network
London First
MEPC plc
Residents' Association of Mayfair
Thames Valley Chamber of Commerce and Industry
The Corporation of the City of London

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total cost of Britain's contribution to the peace process in the former Yugoslavia.

The Prime Minister: The costs cannot be precisely calculated but are considerable in the military, political and humanitarian fields. Up to 31 March 1993, the United Kingdom's contribution to UNPROFOR operations in Croatia and Bosnia has amounted to £93,835,679. Further expenditure of £2,576,831 has been incurred as a result of the airlift of humanitarian supplies to Sarajevo. We expect to recover a proportion of these costs from the United Nations in due course.

EC Additionality

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of the European Commission to discuss the application of the additionality principle by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other member states; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I last discussed additionality with the Commission and other EC Heads of State and Government at the European Council in Edinburgh. We agreed that the basic principles laid down in 1988—concentration, programming, partnership and additionality—should continue to guide the implementation of the structural funds. Financial control more generally will be strengthened and greater emphasis will be given to appraisal, monitoring and evaluation. The current review of the structural funds regulations is examining the Commission's proposal on additionality.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he intends to bring to the Council of Europe Heads of State summit in October with regard to the European Court of Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Council of Europe Committee of Ministers, at its meeting at Strasbourg on 14 May, instructed that work should proceed urgently on the mandate for a draft protocol amending the European convention on human rights, to be submitted to Heads of State and Government at the Council of Europe summit in October. The United Kingdom will contribute fully to this work.

The purpose of the draft protocol will be to reform the control machinery of the convention, in order to accommodate the growing workload of the European Court and Commission of Human Rights and to ensure that cases are heard in good time. All member states are agreed that such reform is urgently needed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the waiting time for cases to be decided in the European Court of Human Rights for cases commencing in the last 10 years; what is the projected waiting time for cases commencing in the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the waiting time for cases to be decided by the European Court of Human Rights over the past 10 years is not readily available.

In practice, most cases are dealt with by the Commission of Human Rights. For those cases which reach the court, the waiting time for a decision is now five to six years. It is clear that, unless there are changes to the machinery of the European convention on human rights, the delays will grow as more countries join the Council of Europe and as awareness of the system increases.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has indicated earlier, the United Kingdom will contribute fully to the work now under way to improve the system so that cases are heard in good time.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1963 the United Kingdom has been found in breach of the provisions of the European convention of human rights; and what that number represents as a proportion of (a) cases brought against the United Kingdom and (b) plaintiff won cases.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases are currently proceeding against Her Majesty's Government through the European Court of Human Rights; and how much time each has taken so far since commencement of the action.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are at present seven cases before the European Court of Human Rights. These cases were first introduced to the European Commission of Human Rights on 28 September 1988; early 1989; 19 January 1989; 9 October 1989; 8 January 1990; 2 February 1990; and 11 May 1990.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to hold meetings with the three parties involved in the civil war in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg, the co-chairmen of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia, hold regular talks with the parties to the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina. They met most recently with the leaders of the Bosnian Government and the Bosnian Croats on 18 May. Military commanders of the three parties meet regularly in the mixed military working group in Sarajevo, under the auspices of the international conference. We have no plans to hold separate meetings with the parties.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what breaches there have been of the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina since the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 816; and if he will list them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UNPROFOR reports of violations of the no-fly zone give details of 28 breaches or probable breaches between 12 April, when the NATO operation to enforce the no-fly zone began, and 12 May, the end of the period covered by the latest UNPROFOR report.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what importance Her Majesty's Government attach to the current co-operation of the leadership of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in supporting the Vance/Owen peace plan; and what measures have been taken to encourage their further support.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: While we welcome President Milosevic's announcement of support for the Vance/Owen plan, we have made it clear we now expect him to use all his influence to persuade the Bosnian Serbs to accept it. We have called on him to accept international monitoring of the border between Bosnia and Serbia/Montenegro to establish whether he is carrying out his declared intention to cut off all but essential humanitarian supplies to the Bosnian Serbs. President Milosevic is aware that United Nations Security Council resolution 820 provides for a review of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro if the Bosnian Serbs accept the peace plan and effectively implement it in good faith.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all confirmed breaches of the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina since its introduction, in circumstances where aircraft are known to have crossed international frontiers; if he will detail the origin and destination of such flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been 545 violations or probable violations of the no-fly zone set up in UN Security Council resolutions 761 and 776 since 13 October 1992. Most of these appear to have taken place entirely within Bosnian airspace, although there have been some instances where aircraft have been observed flying away from or towards an international border. The information available in these cases is generally insufficient to determine whether the aircraft involved actually crossed the border.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when discussions are next scheduled with EC or United Nations Security Council partners to discuss the implementation of a monitoring force along the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A resolution authorising the deployment of United Nations monitors along the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina is currently under discussion at the UN in New York.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the continuation of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in respect of their co-operation and support for the Vance-Owen peace plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN sanctions have made a major contribution to the current serious economic situation in Serbia and Montenegro. We consider that the pressure exerted by the international community, including sanctions, was instrumental in the recent decision of the Presidents of Serbia and Montenegro and of the so-called Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to announce support for the Vance-Owen peace plan.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom plans to contribute forces to monitor the border between Bosnia-Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At its meeting on 10 May, the EC Foreign Affairs Council indicated that the European Community and its member states would be willing to contribute to international efforts to monitor Bosnia's border with Serbia and Montenegro. No decision has yet been taken on a United Kingdom contribution.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government last had official contact with the President of Serbia; and what were the circumstances and outcome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister sent a message to President Milosevic on 17 May. He welcomed President Milosevic's agreement to support the Vance/Owen plan and to close the border of Serbia with Bosnia to all but humanitarian supplies, but made it clear that we would judge the President's policies by deeds rather than words. We support the EC offer to contribute to an international monitoring operation on the Serbia-Bosnia border to ensure that President Milosevic lives up to his commitment.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the introduction of further sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia if there is no change in current political circumstances.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions were toughened recently with the passage of Security Council resolution 820 on 17 April but we would certainly consider the need for further measures against Serbia and Montenegro if we felt the political situation required them.

Israel

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the British Government have made to encourage Israel to implement its human rights obligations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly raise human rights issues with the Israeli authorities, and have done so within the last month. I set out our considerable concerns on Israel's record in the occupied territories when I addressed the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva in February.

United Nations Security Council

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State since his decision not to attend the proposed United Nations Security Council meeting on Friday 21 May; and what indications Mr. Christopher has given since them in respect of support for the Vance/Owen peace plan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had talks with Mr. Christopher on 21 and 22 May on a range of United Nations issues including the former Yugoslavia. On 22 May, the Foreign Ministers of the United States, France, Russia and Spain, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, met in Washington and agreed a joint programme of action, with the objectives of stopping the conflict and of moving forward to a lasting political solution building on the Vance/Owen process and intensified international cooperation.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons the United States Secretary of State has given to Her Majesty's Government for his country's decision not to attend a proposed United Nations Security Council meeting to be held on Friday 21 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Russia, which holds the presidency of the Security Council this month, originally proposed a meeting of the council on 21 May with Foreign Ministers present to review follow-up to the United Nations Secretary-General's report "An Agenda for Peace". My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had planned to attend the meeting. In the event, the Russians decided to postpone it.

Personnel

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of his Department's personnel are United Kingdom based; and what information he has on comparable data for the foreign ministries of France and Germany.

Mr. Goodlad: Approximately 61 per cent. of the FCO's diplomatic wing staff and 95 per cent. of the aid wing staff, including the ODA's executive agency, the Natural Resources Institute, fill jobs in the United Kingdom. Approximately 39 per cent of French foreign ministry staff and 47 per cent. of German foreign ministry staff fill jobs in France and Germany respectively. But it is extremely difficult to make valid comparisons between the figures for the FCO and other foreign ministries, because of differences in the functions for which each is responsible; differences in structure; and differences in the division of tasks between home and overseas.

Settlement Visas

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average waiting time for an interview for a settlement visa (a) generally and (b) from the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On average, the waiting times for settlement visa interviews are:

(a) Generally: this information is not available centrally.

(b) In the Indian Sub-Continent at end of March 1993:

	Months
1. Queue 1: people with claim to right of abode, dependent relatives over 70, special compassionate Cases	3
2. Queue 2: all spouses and all children under 18 years	4½
3. Queue 3: fiance(é)s and others applying for the first time for settlement	6½
4. Queue 4: Reapplicants	9

Diplomatic Estate

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, if he will list those publications, in addition to the Official Journal of the European Community, in which invitations are routinely published for construction companies to tender for work on the overseas diplomatic estate.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1993, c. 624]: Herewith the corrected version, omitting the first sentence.

Invitations to tender are not routinely published. It is our policy to invite tenders from construction companies short-listed after pre-selection procedures.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, how often, and in what format, the further information about a wider range of projects to which he refers is circulated to the Export Group for the Construction Industry; if that information includes all opportunities for work on the overseas diplomatic estate, or only selected opportunities for such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1993, c. 623]: Herewith the corrected version, omitting the first sentence.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office sends a list about once a year to the Export Group for the Construction Industries of key details about planned projects likely to be of interest to United Kingdom construction companies and of an estimated value above a stated threshold. For 1983-86 the threshold was £250,000; for 1987-89, £500,000; and since 1990, £1 million. The latest list will be sent within the next few weeks.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Russian Federation

40. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the provision of aid to the Russian Federation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has consistently supported the process of economic and political reform being undertaken by President Yeltsin and his Government, and endorsed by popular referendum in April. The British contribution for this year and next will be £444 million, plus the bulk of a $1 billion commitment for export credits for the whole of the former Soviet Union.

Poverty Forecasts

41. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what forecasts he has made of the change in the number of people in the world who are living in absolute poverty by the year 2000.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A number of bodies, including the World bank, have made varying forecasts of the numbers in poverty. The reduction of poverty, through sustainable economic and social development, is the central aim of our aid programme.

Nigeria

42. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the aid given to Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Nigeria remains a major aid recipient. Gross bilateral aid in 1991-92 totalled £14·46 million. We are currently developing programmes of assistance in areas of health, education, natural resources and good government.

Africa (Aid)

43. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development next intends to visit Africa to discuss matters relating to aid and development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development hopes to visit east and southern Africa later in the year. Her detailed programme is not yet available.

United Nations Funds

88. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been granted by the Overseas Development Administration to (a) the United Nations Environmental Programme, (b) the United Nations Development Programme, (c) the United Nations Children's Fund, (d) the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, (e) the International Fund for Agricultural Development and (f) the World Food Programme in each year from 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table shows United Kingdom Government contributions to those organisations specified.

[1] ODA makes no contribution to UNEP; Funds are disbursed by the Department of Environment but counted in Aid Statistics as Official Development Assistance.
[2] The 1991-92 figure for UNICEF does not include United Kingdom responses to emergency and supplementary appeals. These totalled £4,634 thousand.
[3] The 1991-92 figure for FAO includes a supplementary contribution of £132 thousand.

Developing Countries

104. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been contributed by his Department to (a) the common fund and (b) the European Community's STABEX, COMPLEX and SYSMIN mechanisms to compensate developing countries for shortfalls in commodity earnings in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA has contributed, via the Department of Trade and Industry, to the common fund for commodities as follows:

1990	[1]896,910
1990	[2]448,455
1991	[2]1,793,830
1992	[3]—

The United Kingdom's share of the Community's expenditure on STABEX, COMPEX, and SYSMIN was as follows:

STABEX
1990	25,089,880
1991	55,430,396
1992	46,263,043

Yugoslavia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tonnes of humanitarian aid were delivered to Bosnia-Herzegovina along the land corridor from Split through Vitez before the recent Croat-Muslim hostilities; and which alternative routes have been used subsequently.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Exact figures for the total tonnage of humanitarian aid sent to Bosnia-Herzegovina subdivided by specific routes are unavailable. It is estimated that some 70,000 tonnes of humanitarian aid have been delivered from Metkovic, which is used as the principal depot for convoys into Bosnia from the south, and which is supplied from Split and Ploce, since November 1992.

Recent hostilities in the Mostar area have resulted in the closure of the main road and caused these convoys to have to follow more circuitous routes which involve using mountain tracks. As a result, it takes convoys longer to reach Vitez and other areas of central Bosnia, thereby reducing the amount of relief supplies they are able to deliver.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the numbers of (a) Serbian and Muslim citizens of Zagreb and (b) Muslim and Croat citizens of Belgrade who have been displaced as a result of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Detailed figures of the number of people displaced by the conflict in the former Yugoslavia are not kept by municipality. The latest estimate from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is that in Croatia there are some 246,000 displaced people from other parts of Croatia and 238,000 from Bosnia-Herzegovina. In Serbia there are 166,000 who have fled from Croatia and 219,000 from Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Macedonia

112. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been given by the Government and the EC to Macedonia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have already provided £1 million of emergency aid, in the form of urgently needed medical supplies, to Macedonia. We have committed a further £1 million for 1993-94. The EC has committed a total of 45 million ecus for the supply of primary materials, including fuel, medical supplies and technical assistance to Macedonia. In addition, the EC has committed 15 million ecus for emergency aid.

Road Construction

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many miles of road he estimates that his Department will fund in third-world countries in the coming year; by whom these roads will be constructed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration expects to fund the construction and rehabilitation of 312·7 miles of road in the developing countries in the coming year. This work will be carried out by local labour and/or United Kingdom contractors. A breakdown by country is as follows:

Country	Miles	Contractor

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the International Development Association regarding the economic prospects of the countries in sub-Saharan Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in regular touch with the World bank about the economic prospects of countries in sub-Saharan Africa, especially through periodic consultative group meetings for individual countries and through the special programme of assistance for sub-Saharan Africa, a mechanism for co-ordinating bilateral and multilateral assistance to support economic reform in the region.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Objections to Bail

36. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria the Crown Prosecution Service considers when deciding whether to object to bail.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service takes into account the considerations and exceptions to the right to bail set out in the Bail Act 1976 and any other relevant information available to it, including material from the police, the probation service, and other sources.

European Law Specialists

Ms Quin: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff in his Departments specialise in European law.

The Attorney-General: The Government legal service contains a large number of lawyers with expertise in European law. In the legal secretariat to the Law Officers there are five lawyers with specialist skills in this subject.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Official Report (CD-ROM)

Ms Gordon: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee, pursuant to his answer of 2 December 1992, Official Report, column 201, what progress has been made in the consideration of making the Official Report available to hon. Members on CD-ROM.

Mr. Waller: A CD-ROM version of the Official Report covering the period from 1990 is available for reference in the Members' Library in the Palace and Derby Gate Library. For a trial period, Members who choose not to receive the bound volumes of the Official Report may obtain one copy of the CD-ROM covering the period from the start of the current Parliament on application at the Vote Office. This arrangement will be reviewed in due course.

Tools for Self Reliance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Tools for Self Reliance" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 28 June to 2 July.

EDUCATION

English Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what period of time passed between his announcement of the revised orders for English and their delivery to all schools in England; and what percentage this is of the consultation period.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend announced proposals for revisions to the English order on 15 April and asked the National Curriculum Council to carry out the statutory consultation in England and report by 30 September. Dispatch of the proposals to all schools in England was completed by 17 May. The period for consultation extends until 30 July.

Nursing Education

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each Greater London borough, the percentages of children under five years old currently registered in nursery places (a) in 1986, (b) in 1988, (c) in 1990, (d) in 1992 and (e) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: Participation rates in each local education authority in Greater London in 1986, 1988, 1990 and 1992 —the latest date for which information is available—are shown in the table.

Because of recent revisions to the population estimates to take account of the provisional results of the 1991 census of population, the participation rates for 1992 are not directly comparable at the LEA level with those for earlier years.

[2] Information was not collected prior to 1991 for the individual boroughs which comprised the Inner London Education Authority (ILEA).

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in each London borough currently provide nursery classes; and how many children attend such classes.

Mr. Forth: Information about the number of maintained nursery schools and maintained primary schools with designated nursery classes in each local education authority in Greater London and the numbers of pupils aged under five who attended such classes in January 1992 are shown in the table.

Science Tests

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes have been made to the key stage 3 science tests following his consideration of the comments he received from science teachers, inspectors and advisers after the 1992 tests.

Mr. Forth: An independent evaluation of the 1992 science tests for 14-year-olds conducted for the School Examinations and Assessment Council has led to changes which are designed to improve the reliability of the test questions and marking scheme.

GCSE Assessments

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what date it was decided to delay the introduction of the new assessment arrangements for GCSE; and on what date that decision was communicated to schools in England.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend announced on 30 April that the present grading arrangements for GCSE will be retained for 1994 pending the outcome of the current review of the national curriculum and assessment by Sir Ron Dearing. Detailed information about this decision will be sent to schools by the School Examinations and Assessment Council on 24 May.

Grant-Maintained Schools (Disabled Facilities)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools have facilities for disabled students; and what percentage this is of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collated centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all the successful capital grant requests from grant-maintained schools in each of the last three years stating the work to be carried out and its value; and how many of these projects enabled disabled students to have access to these schools.

Mr. Forth: I have placed in the Library copies of papers detailing the allocations of named project capital grant to self-governing—grant-maintained—schools in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Allocations are made on the basis of specific priorities. Since 1991-92 these priorities have been urgent health and safety work, major repairs, bids under the technology schools initiative, and improvements to the delivery of the national curriculum, especially science and technology. Information on the number of projects which have facilitated disabled students' access to schools is not available.

Age-weighted Pupil Unit

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will publish a table indicating the value in cash terms of the age-weighted pupil unit used this year by the local education authorities in (a) North Yorkshire, (b) Cleveland, (c) County Durham, (d) Cumbria, (e) Lancashire, (f) Bradford, (g) Leeds, (h) Wakefield, (i) Doncaster and (j) Humberside for children in nursery classes, children in reception classes and children in each year from year 1 through to sixth form;

(2) What is the value in cash terms of the age-weighted pupil unit used this year for children in nursery classes, reception classes and in each year from year 1 to sixth form by his Department for funding each grant-maintained school in North Yorkshire, Cleveland, County Durham, Cumbria, Lancashire, Bradford, Leeds, Wakefield, Doncaster and Humberside; and what are the amounts per child in each of these schools, the amount of transitional funding, special purpose grant, top-up funding and other DFE funding provided this year.

Mr. Forth: Information on age-weighted pupil unit values is contained in part 3 of the budget statement required to be published by each local education authority under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988. These returns from the 10 local education authorities listed are being placed in the Library. Annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools is calculated by reference to the local education authority's local management of schools scheme and so incorporates its age-weighted pupil units. Grant-maintained schools also receive a share of the local education authority's central budgets, calculated as a percentage addition to the local management of schools budget rather than a sum per pupil.

As soon as a school is approved as self governing, transitional grant is available to help in preparing the school to take on its new responsibilities. Secondary schools, and primary schools with 200 or more pupils, are currently eligible to receive £30,000 plus £30 for each pupil, subject to a maximum of £60,000.

A primary school with fewer than 200 pupils is eligible to receive £20,000 plus £30 for each pupil. A range of other special purpose grants are available to self-governing schools. Of these, only the grant for curriculum and staff development is derived from pupil numbers in the school. This grant is paid, for 1993-94, at the rate of £42·50—or the part-year equivalent—per pupil. Self-governing schools are also eligible for a pupil related capital allocation for 1993-94. A full year's allocation is £11,000 plus £20 per pupil. Schools becoming self-governing through the year will receive a pro rata allocation.

GCSE

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average number of GCSE passes received in (i) grant-maintained schools and (ii) other state schools under the control of local authorities in 1992.

Mr. Forth: The average number of GCSE passes received by 16-year-old pupils in (i) self-governing state —grant-maintained—schools was 7·6 and (ii) other maintained schools excluding special schools under the control of local authorities 7·2 in 1992.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each grant-maintained school in 1933-94 the value of (a) the direct annual maintenance grant and (b) the central annual maintenance grant; and what is (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Forth: The information is given in the table. The cash figures and percentages given could change in many cases as we continue to refine grants in consultation with schools and LEAs.

[1] Consultation on a proposed final grants for these schools has been completed and a finalised grant notified to the school and LEA.
[2] School became grant maintained after 1 April 1993.

Dyslexia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of school children removed from school because of behavioural problems in the last three years are dyslexic.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

First Aid

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will require basic instruction in first aid to be part of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 already requires the curriculum of maintained schools to prepare pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life. As part of that preparation, all pupils are now required to be taught those aspects of safety education contained in several national curriculum core and foundation subjects. In addition, the National Curriculum Council has issued guidance to all maintained schools in England offering advice on how schools might incorporate topics about safety education, including knowledge of basic first aid, into their wider programmes of health education.

Law Students

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations his Department has received in the last 12 months regarding discretionary grants made by local authorities to trainee lawyers.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received over the last six months on the subject of discretionary grants to law students seeking to qualify in one of the two branches of the legal profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject. They have been made by the Law Society, the College of Law and the Trainee Solicitors Group, among others. We have also received correspondence and parliamentary questions from several hon. Members on the training of lawyers.

GEST Funding

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each of the last three years the local education authorities which have not been able to take up grants for education support and training funding offered to them; for what purposes the unused funding was originally made available; and what it was used for subsequently.

Mr. Forth: The information provided in the table is for 1992-93 and for 1993-94. Information about 1991-92 is not readily available. The tables set out the local education authorities which surrendered some of the allocations made available to them. Each year's programme covers some 30 or more individual grants for different purposes. The sums surrendered ranged across most grants. We do not know what use LEAs will have made of their unused 40 per cent. contribution to GEST allocations. The saving in central Government grant which represents 60 per cent. of GEST allocations has been redeployed to a range of other Department of Education programmes. To provide the full information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Educational Psychology

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the funding allocation for the educational psychology service for each year since 1985.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held centrally. Each local education authority is responsible for securing educational psychology services in the light of local needs and priorities. Central Government, through the grants and education support and training programme, provide financial support to authorities to assist them with the costs of the initial training of educational psychologists. Funds to support LEA expenditure of £3·5 million on the training of educational psychologists have been allocated in 1993-94.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking (a) to protect the educational psychology service and (b) to ensure a common standard service throughout the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Each local education authority is responsible for securing educational psychology services in its area. The Education Bill contains power to enable authorities to provide support services, such as educational psychology, to all pupils with special educational needs, including those without statements.

Under the Bill, all authorities in England and Wales will be placed under a duty to have regard to the provisions of a code of practice, issued by the Secretary of State, giving them practical guidance in discharging their duty towards children with special educational needs. One of the objectives of the code is to secure greater consistency in local education authority practice, to the benefit of children with SEN and their parents.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many educational psychologists were employed by each local education authority in each year since 1985.

Mr. Forth: Information on the number of educational psychologists employed by individual local education authorities is collected annually by the Department. However, pre-1992 returns were not compiled in a standard format and are not readily available for every year. Figures are shown in the table for 1985 and 1992.

Behavioural Problems (Referrals)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each year since 1985 by local education authority, the number of referrals by teachers of children with behavioural problems.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not centrally available.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Employees (Concessions)

11. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received over the past year concerning the future of concessionary travel facilities for current British Rail employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have given a clear assurance that travel concessions for employees of BR and their dependants, and for retired staff will be safeguarded in the privatisation of British Rail.

Red Routes

13. Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the operation of red routes has had on the use of buses in the relevant areas.

Mr. Norris: Since the start of the pilot scheme in 1991, the number of passengers using the 43 route and the new express service introduced last year has increased by about 11,000 a week. This is an increase of about 10 per cent., compared with a small overall decline in bus patronage in London over the same period.

London Transport Staff (Assaults)

14. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many physical assaults on London Transport staff took place in each year since 1988.

Mr. Norris: There were 517 assaults on LT staff in 1990-91, 689 in 1991-92, and the provisional total for 1992-93 is 622. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Crossrail

15. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the crossrail project.

Mr. MacGregor: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in his speech to the CBI last Tuesday, we have concluded that crossrail can be carried forward as a joint venture with the private sector and that London Transport's Crossrail Bill should proceed to its Second Reading next month.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those organisations and companies, other than the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance, from which he has received recent representations concerning the crossrail project.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend and I have received representations in recent weeks from the following organisations and companies:
Aylesbury Vale District Council
British Airways plc
Buckinghamshire County Council
Department of Trade & Industry
Grosvenor House
Howard de Walden Estates Ltd.
London Borough of Camden
London Chamber of Commerce and Industry
London Regional Passengers' Committee
London Tourist Board and Convention Bureau
Oxford Street Association
Regalian Group of Companies
Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors
Save London's Theatres Campaign
Sir Alexander Gibb & Partners
St Albans Friends of the Earth
Trafalgar House
Wokingham Friends of the Earth

West Coast Main Line

16. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the proposal by the consortium consisting of Trafalgar House, Balfour Beatty and GEC Alsthom, in connection with upgrading of the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: The consortium has put forward outline proposals for a joint venture to upgrade the west coast main line and I have responded to them. Further work is in hand to identify a way forward—which must include a competition for the choice of private sector partners.

21. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the locomotive breakdowns, signal failures and other causes of train delays on the west coast main line, from 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held by the Department. These are operational matters for British Rail.

British Rail Journey Times

17. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail on the reduction of journey times on its principal routes.

Mr. Freeman: The timetabling and routing of services is entirely a matter for the management of British Rail and it would not be appropriate for Ministers to intervene.

Traffic Congestion, London

18. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce traffic congestion in London.

Mr. Norris: Our aim is a much-improved public transport system, capable of responding efficiently to changes in demand, and offering a good-quality alternative to the private car. In terms of the road network, we are planning increasing emphasis on road traffic management measures—such as the introduction of red routes—to improve the reliability of journeys—especially for buses—to take traffic off residential roads, and to provide safer conditions for pedestrians and cyclists. Our roads investment programme has the limited objectives of improving orbital movement, dealing with congestion black spots, and improving access to docklands and east London. For the longer term, we are examining the case for and against congestion charging in London.

East Thames Corridor

19. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with which organisations he has discussed transport links in the east Thames corridor.

Mr. MacGregor: The east Thames corridor was one of the topics I discussed at a meeting which I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment had recently with the chairman and other representatives of the London and South East regional planning conference. Also, my Department participates in the east Thames corridor forum.

Red Star Parcels

20. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the publication of the memorandum of sale of Red Star Parcels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board is at an advanced stage in preparing the Red Star information memorandum, and will publish it as soon as all relevant documentation has been completed.

Bus Deregulation

22. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the effect on passengers of the introduction of tendering for London's buses.

Mr. Norris: Tendering has introduced an element of competition into the provision of bus services in London. The effect has been to improve service quality and reduce costs, both on tendered routes and on the rest of the network, to the benefit of the bus passenger and the taxpayer alike.

29. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from private companies concerning the proposed deregulation of London Buses.

Mr. Norris: I have received a number of written and oral representations from private companies concerning aspects of our plans to deregulate London bus services.

Local Roads (Speed Limits)

23. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates have been made of the effect of 20 mph zones on the safety of local roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Transport Research Laboratory is currently carrying out a study into the effectiveness of 20 mph zones in improving safety on local roads. Early research shows that reductions in speed brought about by the traffic-calming measures have resulted in a 50 per cent. fall in road casualties within these zones. It has also been found that accidents on surrounding roads have not increased. However, it is still very early days and much remains to be learnt about the operation of 20 mph zones.

Rolling Stock (Leasing)

24. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken and will take to promote the development of a rolling stock leasing market.

Mr. Freeman: The measures include approval in the autumn statement for the leasing of £150 million of new rolling stock by British Rail. British Rail is to establish rolling stock companies and transfer its existing stock to them by 1 April 1994. These companies will lease stock to franchisees and BR's operating divisions pending franchising. They will be transferred to the private sector as soon as practicable. The Government are proposing to add a new clause to the Railways Bill specifically enabling the franchising director to exercise his franchising powers to encourage investment. This would, for example, allow the franchising director to undertake to lessors that, if they supplied new trains, he would ensure that those trains were used on two or more successive franchisees, thus giving the lessors comfort that they would not be left with trains which they could not release at the end of the first franchise. Such undertakings should help to encourage private sector investment in rolling stock in the early years of franchising before an active secondhand market for rolling stock develops.

Ashford International Railway Station

25. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the building of a new Ashford international railway station together with related works.

Mr. Freeman: I visited Ashford on 17 May and announced that British Rail expects to go out to tender in July for the track and platform works for the international station with a view to works starting in October. The Government have allocated £30 million for such works. I also announced that the principal terms have been agreed for a competition for the private sector to build the station, car parks and other development. The details are currently being finalised and within two weeks British Rail will be seeking initial expressions of interest.

British Rail and London Buses (Restructuring)

26. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given since 8 May to revising the Government's proposed restructuring of British Rail and London Buses.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are always ready to reconsider their policies where there is good reason for doing so.

Freight (Rail Promotion)

27. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of measures taken to encourage freight operators to use rail rather than road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1975, grants have been available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 to assist companies to meet the capital cost of projects in cases where the goods would otherwise go by road and where there are readily quantifiable environmental benefits in removing lorry traffic. Some 200 schemes have been assisted at a cost of £78 million in cash terms. This has resulted in 3 million annual lorry journeys removed from the roads.

To further encourage a switch from road to rail, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced three important new measures during the Second Reading of the Railways Bill on 2 February 1993. These are set out in the Official Report, columns 164-65. These measures cannot be implemented prior to the passing of the legislation and until Railtrack is operational as a commercial entity.

Both the enhanced freight facilities grants scheme and the proposed track access charges grant will be monitored to ensure that payments continue to represent value for money.

Rail Headquarters

28. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish the headquarters of Railtrack, the Rail Franchising Authority and the rail regulator in York.

Mr. Freeman: No. The franchising director and the rail regulator will need to maintain close and constant liaison with each other, the Department of Transport, BR, train operators and others, many of whom are also located in London. Initially, at least, their headquarters will therefore be in London.

While it remains a division of British Rail, the location of Railtrack's headquarters is a matter for the British Railways Board.

Railways

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement setting out his policy on exemptions to be granted from the various requirements of part I of the Railways Bill.

Mr. Freeman: I have today published a statement setting out our policy, and placed a copy in the Library. Copies are available from the Department of Transport, Room S18/22, 2 Marsham street, London SW1P 3EB.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when open access for operators of new services will come into effect, following enactment of the Railways Bill.

Mr. Freeman: It is intended that open access—the opportunity for new operators to run services on the rail network—will start in April 1994, the proposed vesting date for Railtrack. We have already announced that there will be restrictions placed on open access, to the extent necessary to allow the successful transfer of British Rail's passenger services to the private sector. Guidance on the restrictions required for each franchise will be given when invitations to tender are issued. If open access operators apply for train paths in advance of invitations to tender for the franchise concerned, they will be informed then of the terms of competition which will apply.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to decide the full programme for franchising British Rail's passenger services.

Mr. MacGregor: I have today published plans for the restructuring of BR's passenger network into 25 businesses which will be the basis for franchises to be offered to the private sector. Included in this are some parts of the network which will be further reviewed to decide on the grouping of services for franchising: the central region of Regional Railways and InterCity cross country and Regional Railways long-distance inter-urban services. Copies of the full list of service groupings and illustrative maps of them have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further consideration he has given to the Transport Select Committee's first and second reports on the "Future of the Railways"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I responded to the Committee's interim report by letter on 20 January. I responded to the Committee's final report on the future of the railways on Friday 21 May. I very much welcome the Select Committee's conclusion

"that the Government is right to examine ways of involving the private sector in the railways as a means of increasing the total amount of investment".

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to begin discussions with private sector interests about the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is today sending a consultation document to a number of private sector interests. Views are invited on the best way of taking the project forward so as to offer the private sector a proper return on its investment and to secure value for money for the taxpayer. The Department will hold follow-up discussions where appropriate. I am placing a copy of the consultation document in the Library.

Road Bridges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the merits of design and build of road bridges relative to conventionally commissioned structures.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No representations for publicly financed design and build road bridges schemes have been received. There is, however, an ongoing dialogue with the industry.

M1-M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if an environmental impact assessment of proposals for an M1-M62 link road will be carried out under EC directive 85/337/EEC.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: If proposals for a M1-M62 link road go ahead, an environmental impact assessment will be carried out under EC directive 85/337/EEC. An environmental statement under this directive would normally be issued at the time of publication of draft orders under the Highways Act.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many M1-M62 questionnaires he has received from local residents and those involved in the link road proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Almost 6,000 completed questionnaires have been received in response to public consultation on the M1-M62 link road proposals.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the grey route proposals for the M1-M62 link road are publicly available; and what assessments have been made of this route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Details of the grey route were released at the public consultation. It was rejected on the basis of its effect on property in Lower Hopton, higher cost and low value for money.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make publicly available all data associated with traffic studies for the proposed M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All reasonable requests for traffic data in connection with the M1-M62 link road proposals will continue to be met.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when traffic surveys carried out to determine the impact of the proposed M1-M62 link road were undertaken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Traffic surveys for the proposed M1-M62 link road were undertaken between May 1990 and June 1991.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what weighting was placed upon traffic calculations for the M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The calculations for the traffic forecasts for the proposed M1-M62 link road are derived from a complex computer model and depend upon a number of predictions. I will write to the hon. Member in relation to these and their weighting.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are under consideration to encourage and improve road safety for the (a) purple and (b) yellow route M1-M62 link proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Both the yellow and purple routes would improve road safety in the area as a whole. If one of these is selected as the preferred route and taken forward for further development, measures to encourage and improve road safety would be pursued.

Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the accuracy of the national road traffic forecasts index.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The national road traffic forecasts give forecasts of traffic by type of vehicle on all roads in Great Britain. The current forecasts were issued in 1989, based on 1988, and are provided up to 2025. The table compares the forecasts in terms of all vehicle kilometres with the outturn. The forecasts are given in a range between low and high.

They are long-term forecasts, and are not expected to be completely accurate year on year, or over short periods.

Indices of traffic—1988 = 100

Year	Forecast of all Traffic[1]		Outturn Traffic[1]
	Low	High
1988	100		100
1989	104	105	108
1990	106	109	110
1991	108	113	110
1992	110	117	108

[1] All motor vehicles except two-wheelers.
The 1992 statistics of outturn are provisional.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if COBA 9 cost benefit analysis systems are to be replaced.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department uses the principles of cost benefit analysis to assess the economic viability of schemes in the national road programme. The COBA program incorporates the principles of cost benefit analysis and is used to assess the majority of schemes. The techniques and parameters within the program are continually under review and occasionally changes have to be made as the results of new research become available. COBA 9, the version currently in use, is a flexible program and generally parameter changes can be made by the user following instructions issued by the Department. However, periodically it is necessary to revise the program itself and a new version, COBA 10, is currently being developed for release later this year.

Robin Hood Line

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), of 17 May, Official Report, column 2, in what financial year he intends to make funding available for the Robin Hood line; under what powers such assistance will be given; and what discussions he has had about extending the line to Retford.

Mr. Freeman: Assistance will be given either in the form of credit approvals under part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 or, subject to appraisal, in the form of grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968. Discussions are in progress with Nottinghamshire county council about the nature and timing of this funding, and about the case for further extending passenger services on the Robin Hood line.

Public Transport

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to encourage more people to use public transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to encourage the use of (a) bus and (b) rail public transport.

Mr. Freeman: The best way of encouraging greater use of public transport is to promote increased choice for passengers and increased competition for the provision of public transport services. The Government's policies of deregulation and privatisation will help to achieve these objectives. We are also continuing to make resources available for high levels of investment by those public transport operators who remain in the public sector; the autumn statement provided for expenditure of some £2 billion a year on public transport over the next three years. We have also made increased resources available this year to enable local authorities to help local bus services through bus priority measures. I look forward to further proposals from local authorities in their transport policy and plans bids later this year. My Department also has a programme of research on city congestion charging, one of whose possible benefits would be to influence people's travel choices and improve the competitive position of public transport.

Road Pricing Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Oslo to study road pricing schemes.

Mr. MacGregor: I visited Oslo and Gothenburg on 10 and 11 May to see demonstrations and working examples of road charging systems, and to talk to those involved. I was impressed that technology is now available to make electronic systems work successfully. No decisions have been taken about the introduction of charging for roads in the United Kingdom.

I will shortly be issuing a Green Paper on charging for inter-urban roads that will seek views on the issues involved. The paper and the research will reflect the experience of other countries.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of the decisions taken at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development for United Kingdom transport policy.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for supporting the commitment to achieve a reduction in motor vehicle carbon dioxide emission levels to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

Mr. MacGregor: Transport must play its part in the national sustainable development plan and in the programme to limit carbon dioxide emissions. The Government are particularly keen to encourage more economical use of fuel by road transport. We have already taken steps to do this. In the Budget speech, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a 10 per cent. increase in road fuel duties. He also announced that in future Budgets he will increase duty on all road fuels by at least 3 per cent. in real terms.

Other measures to improve fuel efficiency include an emissions check into the MOT test which encourages people to keep their engines in tune and the introduction of speed limiters for new heavy lorries since August 1992 and for many of the heaviest existing lorries from August 1993.

We are encouraging the use of public transport by supporting the highest level of investment in rail for 30 years and we are working with the bus industry and local authorities on ways to make bus travel more attractive, for example, through traffic management measures to speed up journey times.

London Ring Rail

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 862, on the London ring rail, if he will place in the Library details of his response to the proposals of S. B. Tietz and Partners.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 May 1993]: We were very interested to read the proposals which were sent to the Department last year. However it is for British Rail—and, in the longer term, for Railtrack—to consider whether such a project would be worth while and what priority it might deserve in their investment plans. My hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport sent a reply to Mr. Tietz explaining this.

Road Construction

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the economic impact of road construction for urban regeneration.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Secretary of State includes economic revival in inner cities as one of his objectives for local authority transport investment. New roads will be able to improve access to and within certain urban areas, and ease traffic congestion making them more attractive places for people to live and work. Transport supplementary grant support for road projects in urban areas is particularly targeted at the 57 Action for Cities locations. However, the Government recognise that there is a limit to the extent to which the construction of new roads can assist inner city areas, and looks to local authorities, where appropriate for their area, to bring forward alternative proposals for dealing with traffic congestion. Central Government support may for example be given towards measures to improve public transport infrastructure, calm traffic, and offer priority to buses.

London Underground

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of London Underground to discuss the development of the existing underground network.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of London Underground regularly to discuss a variety of issues, including development of the existing underground network.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about his Departments since April 11989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. Dorrell: Copies of the Select Committee reports made since April 1989 which contain recommendations for HM Treasury, and copies of the responses made by the Government, are available from the House of Commons Library. The "Sessional Information Digest" lists Select Committee reports and provides reference numbers to Department responses where appropriate up to the start of the current Session. Similar information for the current Session can be found in the House of Commons "Weekly Information Bulletin".

Economy, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest assessment on the current state of, and prospects for, the London economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor made a statement to the House on the current state of, and prospects for, the national economy, in his Budget statement. It is not our practice to make local forecasts.

Drug Detection

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money HM Customs and Excise has been allocated in each of the last five years for the specific purpose of installing computer intelligence systems to detect drug trafficking.

Sir John Cope: The data are not available in the form requested. Over the past five years, money has been allocated to various computer projects in customs. A number of these include intelligence systems with a specific anti-smuggling function and so make a significant contribution to the detection of drug trafficking.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of (a) the Civil and Public Services Association and (b) the National Union of Civil and Public Servants to discuss the role of customs officers in drug detection.

Sir John Cope: The role of customs officers in drug detection was last discussed by the Minister responsible for HM Customs and Excise and a joint representation of customs trade unions, which included representatives from the Civil and Public Services Association and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants, at a meeting on 4 March 1992. There has since been discussion by correspondence.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of drugs seized within the United Kingdom and its waters in each year from 1988 came from or via other European Community countries.

Sir John Cope: The percentage by weight of drugs seized is shown in the table. The decline in the overall percentage for 1992 does not indicate a drop in quantities coming from or via the EC, but reflects a rise in quantities, particularly cannabis resin and cocaine, arriving direct from other countries.

Percentage

	1988	1989	1990	1991	[2]1992
Amphetamine[1]	78	81	95	95	92
Cannabis herbal	4	50	67	7	44
Cannabis resin	46	40	60	62	27
Cocaine	36	65	3	6	8
Diamorphine (heroin)	13	24	58	30	44
Total via EC	22	41	61	65	32

[2] 1992 figures are provisional.

Animal Smuggling

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were apprehended for smuggling animals into the United Kingdom during 1992.

Sir John Cope: Precise figures are not available on the number of people apprehended for smuggling animals into the United Kingdom.

There were, however, 54 seizures in 1992 of animals being smuggled into the United Kingdom. This figure does not include interceptions by customs of animals subject to rabies controls where subsequent action, as a matter of practice, has been passed to the local authorities.

Higher Rate Taxpayers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect the reductions in the top rate of tax since 1979 have had on restraining the rate of increase in (i) gross earnings and (ii) in the value of perks, share options and pensions for directors.

Mr. Dorrell: Growth rates of gross earnings, perks, share options and pensions for directors are determined by many factors, of which reductions in the top rate of income tax is only one. It would be extremely difficult to identify and measure the contribution of income tax rates.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in the United Kingdom pay income tax at the higher rate.

Mr. Dorrell: About 1·6 million.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the reason for his Department having had the majority shareholding in International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury has not had any shareholding in International Military Services Ltd.

Car Tax

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue forgone by the Exchequer because of the abolition of the car tax.

Sir John Cope: Abolition of car tax has an estimated revenue cost of £100 million in 1992-93 and £750 million in 1993-94. The loss from 1993-94 onwards has been offset by an increase in road fuel duties.

Oil Taxation

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many proposals for oil wells in the North sea have been cancelled as a result of his Budget proposals.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not have access to information which would allow us to answer this question accurately.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what monitoring has been undertaken by his Department of the impact of changes made to the system of mortgage tax relief upon low-income mortgage-holding households; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The restrictions on mortgage interest relief that we introduced in 1988 apply in the same way to borrowers at all income levels. Low-income borrowers were not affected by the abolition of relief at the higher rate from 1991.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his assessment of the results of the Budget measures designed to assist the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Portillo: The Budget measures designed to provide over 100,000 more opportunities for unemployed people are being implemented as quickly as possible by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. They will be closely monitored to test their effectiveness.

Tax Returns

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much the Inland Revenue paid in postal surcharges for completed tax returns which arrived in envelopes that had no, or insufficient, postage in each year since 1990-91; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimates he has for the cost of supplying a reply paid envelope with each tax return; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of supplying a reply paid envelope with each tax return would be about £2 million a year. Information is not held centrally on the cost of postal surcharges, but it is clear that this cost is relatively small.

British Telecom

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of the likely overall cost of the forthcoming British Telecom share offer including consultancy, financial and legal advice, PR, marketing and advertising, underwriting, receiving banks' costs, selling commission and fees and overseas costs of share shops.

Mr. Dorrell: The costs of the BT3 share offer will be reported to Parliament after the sale has been completed. Sales proceeds will be appropriated in aid of the expenses of the sale.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the sum provided for the preliminary expenses of the 1993-94 British Telecom share offer in class XVII, vote 17 of the March 1993 Supply estimates has yet been spent; and when he intends to bring further supplementary estimates before the House.

Mr. Dorrell: Only part of the provision for preliminary expenses of the 1993-94 BT share offer in class XVII, vote 17 of the March 1993 Supply estimates has so far been spent. I will bring further estimates before the House for this expenditure as and when necessary. Proceeds of the sale will be appropriated in aid of the expenses of the sale.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much foreign investors have contributed to the public sector borrowing requirement in 1991 and 1992; what is the forecast for 1993 and 1994; what is the annual cost of servicing this increase in overseas debt from 1991 to date; what is his forecast for the rest of 1993 and 1994; and how the increase in the payments deficit will be financed.

Mr. Nelson: Annual net official sales of British Government stocks to the overseas sector for 1991 and 1992 appear in table 3.5 of the March 1993 edition of "Financial Statistics". Official forecasts of the level of such sales to the overseas sector are not available.

Statistical estimates of the interest paid to the overseas sector on holdings of British Government stocks are available on the Central Statistical Office databank, series XAMF, which is available in the Library. Official forecasts of the annual level of interest payable to the overseas sector on British Government stocks are not available.

The current account deficit forecast for 1993 is small as a percentage of gross domestic product and is expected to be readily financeable, and the measures put in place in the Budget should help to strengthen the United Kingdom's trade position over the years ahead.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the fall in the nominal and real rates of exchange between pound sterling and the individual exchange rate mechanism currencies, the dollar and the yen between August 1973 and February 1987 and (b) the corresponding change in the terms of trade for finished manufactures in trade between the United Kingdom, EEC and non-EEC countries, respectively; and what assessment has been made of the effect on output and unemployment between 1986 and 1988.

Mr. Nelson: Monthly and yearly average daily exchange rates between sterling and the US dollar, the yen and those countries that were members of the ERM during the period in question can be obtained from the CSO database and can also be found in chapter 13 of the CSO's publication "Financial Satistics". Reliable figures for bilateral real exchange rates over that period are not available but real effective exchange rate indexes covering the countries in question can be found in "International Financial Statistics" published by the International Monetary Fund. Prior to 1988, indices for terms of trade are available only on a whole world basis, but these can also be accessed from the CSO database by the Library of the House. There are a large number of influences on output and unemployment at any one time and it is impossible properly to assess the effects of exchange rate changes in isolation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses when deciding whether sterling is fully competitive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no target for either the nominal or the real exchange rate. There are a number of ways of assessing competitiveness: for example, real exchange rates can be calculated using various price indices and there are also economic concepts such as fundamental equilibrium exchange rates and purchasing power parity exchange rates. The only way to secure competitiveness in the long term is for producers to maintain strict control over costs and to sustain a high quality of output.

Relocation

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to relocate Treasury civil servants to Inverness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the estimated increase in earnings of full-time male manual workers, not affected by absence, in manufacturing industry since September 1992 relative to the increase in the real exchange since sterling fell to DM2·30.

Mr. Nelson: Data on the earnings of full-time male manual workers, not affected by absence, in manufacturing industry are available only on an annual basis. Monthly data on the earnings of all employees in manufacturing industries may be found in table 5.1 of the Employment Gazette.

Series for various measures of the real exchange rate are published in "Economic Trends" (table 28). They do not yet extend to the period requested. However, the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (paragraph 3.44) estimated that United Kingdom unit labour costs in manufacturing were unchanged in the fourth quarter of 1992 compared with a year earlier; while our competitors' unit labour costs in manufacturing rose by 3¼ per cent. Over the same period, the nominal exchange rate (ERI) fell by 12¼ per cent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Abuse

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to control the spread of drug abuse in the inner cities.

Mr. Jack: The Government remain committed to improving all aspects of inner city life including combatting the problems of drug misuse. There is an established strategy for tackling drug misuse which aims to reduce both the supply of and demand for drugs. This involves the combined efforts of police and customs together with work on prevention, treatment and rehabilitation by statutory and voluntary agencies. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 has increased the scope for including treatment requirements in probation orders to deal with offenders with problems such as drug dependency. National anti-drugs campaigns have been run since 1985 and drugs education of all primary and secondary schools is now included in the national curriculum. Under the drugs prevention initiative, the Home Office has established local teams in 20 towns and cities in Great Britain. They are working with local communities in finding effective ways of preventing the spread of drug misuse and co-ordinating community preventive action. Some of the safer cities projects have also developed schemes to combat substance misuse. Widespread Government support and participation in European drug prevention week was also aimed at raising awareness of the benefits to be obtained from good preventative approaches.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people during the last three years, to date, have (a) been killed and (b) injured in incidents which are accepted by the appropriate police forces as racially motivated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about introducing new offences connected with racial hatred and racial attacks; and what plans he has to propose such new offences as an amendment to the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords].

Mr. Jack: The Commission for Racial Equality in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976, recommended that consideration be given to specifically crimnalising racial violence and racial harassment. All the CRE's recommendations are now under consideration.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates have been made by his Department of the total annual cost of criminal activities of drug users in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The involvement of drug misusers in criminal activity is difficult to quantify. It has not yet been possible to produce reliable estimates of the cost of drug-related offending, although work is continuing.

Custodial Places

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the number of additional custodial places which will be required if the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords] is amended as outlined in his statement of 13 May.

Mr. Jack: It is at present not possible to make any conclusive assessment on this matter.

Firefighters

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firemen were employed in each local authority area in England for each year since 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of firefighters—men and women—employed in the area of each fire authority since 1987 is given in the table.

Firefighters employed in each local authority area in England on 1 January each year since 1987

Drink-driving

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted for (a) driving under the influence of drugs or (b) drunk driving in each police authority area for each year since 1989.

Mr. Jack: Numbers of convictions for driving after consuming alcohol or taking drugs are published in 'Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary tables', table 16. Copies of this publication for the years in question are in the Library.

The two offences are not separately identifiable from each other in the statistics collected centrally.

Obscene Publications

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, in each year since 1990.

Mr. Jack: The number of prosecutions in England and Wales under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, as amended by the Obscene Publications Act 1964, rose from 174 in 1990 to 364 in 1991, an increase of 109 per cent. 1992 data will not be available until the autumn.

Suspended Sentences

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from judges and the magistracy about the restrictions on the powers to impose a suspended sentence under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: We have received numerous representations from judges and magistrates about various provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991, but we cannot recall receiving any specific representations about the restrictions introduced by the Act on the imposition of suspended sentences.

Asylum Seekers (Angola)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to review his Department's position on applications for asylum and extension of leave to remain in the United Kingdom by applicants from Angola.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All applications for asylum, regardless of nationality, are carefully considered in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees. Each case is assessed on its merits taking account of all the circumstances of the particular case, including conditions in the country of origin. We are keeping a close watch on developments in Angola.

Police (Presentation of Evidence)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the procedure by which the police have to present evidence to the Crown Prosecution Service and also their evidence to the courts in order to increase the effectiveness of criminal prosecutions in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend recently announced a three-month study by consultants to see what can be done to reduce the burden of paperwork and bureaucracy on the police. That study will include a systematic analysis of the procedures by which the police present evidence to the Crown Prosecution Service and the courts.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons convicted young offenders with homes in the north of England have been held in Feltham young offenders institution over the last six months; and how many individuals have been involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 21 May 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, the Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about why convicted young offenders with homes in the North of England have been held in Feltham Young Offender Institution over the last six months; and how many individuals have been involved.

There has been a rapid increase in the number of young offenders being sentenced by the courts to custodial sentences. The bulk of this increase has occurred mainly in the North and Midlands, and whilst we have tried to find places in establishments near to home, it has been necessary to utilise accommodation in the South. This has involved 25 young juveniles, most of whom have now returned to their home area. The two remaining are content to stay at Feltham and take advantage of the wide range of regime activities that are available.

Prison Department (Market Testing)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of the market-testing exercise at the supply and transport division of the Prison Department, how many staff have so far accepted the redundancy terms which were imposed last October; how much the redundancy has cost; and what has been the cost of recruiting replacements so far.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alun Michael, dated 20 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the market testing exercise at the Supply and Transport Branch of the Prison Service.

In September 1992, 106 staff at Branston and 31 staff at Leeds were issued with redundancy notices. Eighty-nine staff have accepted the redundancy terms offered and the total redundancy payments to be made to those staff is currently estimated at £687,000.

Recruitment of new staff for the Branston warehouse is being undertaken by local Supply and Transport management as part of their normal function. There were minimal administrative costs for advertising in the local press, postage, etc., which are estimated not to exceed £100.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any non-governmental consultants currently assisting with Home Office market-testing exercises will in future be allowed to tender for any Home Office businesses.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Restrictions will be placed on consultants bidding for the service provision of a particular market test where they have undertaken work, connected with that particular business, either for the in-house bid team or the market testing unit.

Passport Agency

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Passport Agency framework document will next be reviewed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is planned to complete a review of the United Kingdom Passport Agency's Framework Document between April and October 1994.

Police Mergers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table or tables showing the list of those police forces regarding which a representation has been received urging that it be merged with another force (a) since he took office as Home Secretary and (b) in each of the previous 10 years; and how many representations in each case were made by (i) the police authority, (ii) the chief constable, (iii) serving police officers, (iv) local authorities, (v) magistrates, (vi) members of the public and (vii) other organisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 21 May, at column 343.

Juveniles (Custody)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of an increase in the number of juveniles aged 15 to 17 years who have been committed to custody, other than under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, over the last year; and whether any regional trends are apparent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 19 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of juveniles aged 15 to 17 years of age who had been committed to custody.

I attach a table showing the sentenced prison population aged 15-17 on 31 March 1993, together with corresponding figures for 31 March 1992. These indicate a slight decline in numbers. Separate figures are shown for the three Prison Service directorates. The Directorate of Inmate Administration (DIA) covers Wales and South West and Central England, the Directorate of Custody (DOC) covers London, South East England and East Anglia and the Directorate of Inmate Programmes (DIP) covers the East Midlands and Northern England. The establishment to which a prisoner is allocated depends on the availability of accommodation and so prisoners with homes in one directorate may be allocated to establishments in another directorate.

Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy that any new regime for setting the level of fines shall ensure that there is an objective relationship between the level of the fine, the nature of the offence and the wealth or poverty of the offender.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 13 May, at column 939, his intention that the new provisions which replace the statutory unit fine scheme should still require magistrates who have decided that the appropriate penalty for a particular offence or offences should be a fine fully to consider an offender's means before settling the level of that financial penalty.

Auto Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each police authority in 1991 the number of known offenders found guilty or cautioned for offences of (a) theft or (b) unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle; and what proportion of the total number of known offenders in those categories were (i) juveniles and (ii) young adults;

(2) if he will list for each police authority in 1991 the number of known offenders for offences of theft from a vehicle; and what percentage of those offenders were (a) juveniles and (b) young adults.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the tables.

[1] Theft Act 1968 Section 1.

Unit Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he made of the effect of raising the upper disposable weekly income limit used in the unit fine system from the £25 employed in the four pilot schemes to the £100 used in the scheme brought into effect by the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: Within the maximum fine levels then permitted by law, the upper unit values in the four pilot unit fines schemes were determined individually by the courts involved. When Parliament was invited to approve increases in the maximum levels of fines that might be imposed by a magistrates court, at the same time as it was asked to approve a statutory unit fine scheme, it was understood that the effects would be likely to include an increase in the amounts of fines imposed on offenders with comparatively high incomes and a decrease in the amounts imposed on the less well off and that courts would be likely, in the case of the more serious offences with which they had to deal, to use their maximum sentencing powers.

Juveniles (Supervision Orders)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many supervision orders with residence requirements have been imposed upon juveniles by courts in England and Wales over the last period for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The Children Act 1989 introduced powers which enable the courts to include a requirement in a supervision order that a child or young person shall live for a specified period in local authority accommodation. Information about the numbers subject to the requirement will not be available until the autumn of 1993.

Deportations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals, after being detained under the Immigration Act 1971, were subsequently deported in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on persons removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process is given in table 15 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third and Fourth Quarters and Year 1992", a copy of which is in the Library. Precise information on the number of such persons who had been detained under the Immigration Act 1971 immediately prior to deportation is not available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have been removed or deported as illegal entrants on the basis of false declarations about accommodation in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration Detentions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many individuals have been held in detention under the Immigration Act 1971 in each year since 1990; and how many were attempting to enter the United Kingdom as students, visitors and asylum seekers;

(2) how many individuals were held in detention (a) on arrival in the United Kingdom and (b) after arrival in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is given in the table; the statistics do not identify the basis on which the person sought entry to the United Kingdom.

Passengers detained overnight or longer on arrival	9,007	8,016	6,918
Persons detained overnight or longer after entry[1]	3,607	4,578	4,666

[1] People dealt with under deportation powers.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals seeking asylum were (a) held in detention centres and (b) detained in prison or police stations in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Asylum seekers are not identified separately in the statistics on total persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971. The only readily available information is of the number of asylum seekers who had been detained for more than a month at the points of time given in the table.

Asylum applicants[1] detained for more than one month at certain points of time, by place of detention.

	26 April 1991	3 April 1992	19 May 1993
Harmondsworth	33	42	66
Haslar	36	37	81
Her Majesty's Prisons[2]	51	48	137
Total	120	127	284

[1] Persons detained solely under the powers contained in Schedules 2 or 3 of the Immigration Act 1971. In some cases the asylum application will have been lodged subcequent to the applicant being detained. The figures include both detained asylum applicants who applied at ports, and those detained in after-entry enforcement work. For the latter, the figures exclude persons whose asylum application was refused and who remained in detention pending removal.

[2] No such cases were held in police stations.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to increase the number of detention centres for those held under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Work started in March on the redevelopment of a vacant Prison Service establishment at Campsfield house, Kidlington, near Oxford, to provide up to 200 additional places for immigration detainees.

Further possible options, including the creation of additional facilities close to Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports, are under consideration, but no final decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs in each year since 1990 of running detention centres for those held under the Immigration Act 1971; and what are the projected costs for 1994 and 1995.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Immigration detention centres are managed under contract, and the costs involved are not disclosed on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, columns 216-17, if he will publish the standing instructions issued on the practice of issuing travel documents to those in the United Kingdom on exceptional leave to remain on asylum grounds in the years 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The answer that I gave on 28 April, Official Report, columns 445-46, explained that applications for Home Office travel documents from those granted exceptional leave are considered on their individual merits. It has been our long-standing practice not to publish internal staff instructions.

Ex-Detainees (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ex-detainees from the former Yugoslavia have arrived in the United Kingdom since November 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of 235 ex-detainees and 374 dependants from the former Yugoslavia have so far arrived under the arrangements I announced on 30 November 1992.

Racially Motivated Crime

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to police forces in the United Kingdom about the criteria in defining crime as being racially motivated; and what representations he has received concerning such definition and the recording by the police of racially motivated crime.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All police forces in England and Wales use the definition of racial incidents set out in the 1991 report of the interdepartmental racial attacks group. The definition is as follows:

> Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation by any person.

All forces systematically monitor reported racial incidents and HM inspectorate of constabulary collects statistics centrally.

My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any representations about the above definition or about the police recording of racially motivated crime.

Adolescent Psychiatric Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the establishment of a national forensic adolescent psychiatric service.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Services for mentally disordered adolescents are currently provided by a number of agencies including the national health service, social services, the youth treatment service and the independent sector. The recent Department of Health/Home Office review of services for mentally disordered offenders– Cm 2088—included those relating to children and adolescents.

HEALTH

Child Mortality

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the top 20 causes of death for children aged under 18 years in each year since 1979 and the number of deaths in those years from those 20 causes by sex.

Mr. Sackville: The exact information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information by "International Classification of Diseases" (9th edition) chapter heading, by sex and for the age-group one to 19 years (inclusive) is, however, readily available and will be placed in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the top 20 causes of death in children aged nought to one and one to 16 years for each of the last five years;

(2) what were the 20 commonest causes of death for children aged under one year and the numbers of death by sex for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The exact information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information by "International Classification of Diseases" (9th edition) chapter heading, by sex and for the age-groups nought to one year (28 days to 11 months inclusive) and one to 14 years (inclusive) is, however, readily available and will be placed in the Library.

Gluten-free Foods

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to change the reimbursable status of gluten-free foods and low protein products; how many patients suffering from coeliac disease and metabolic disorders currently benefit from the present arrangements; what is the annual cost; when she expects the committee on borderline substances to report on the future status of currently available products; and if she will hold discussions with the manufacturers of these products and representatives of sufferers.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to change the reimbursable status of gluten-free foods and low protein products. The independent Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances will, however, be reviewing products in these categories later in the year. Its remit is to ensure that such products which have therapeutic use in the treatment of disease in the community can be provided as economically as possible under the national health service. Patients' needs will be taken into account and they will continue to receive products which are necessary to treat their condition under the NHS. We expect the committee to complete this task early next year and manufacturers who may be affected will be given the opportunity to present information to the committee before their products are reviewed. A total of 998,100 prescriptions for foods for special diets were dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and for personal administration, in England in 1992 at a total cost of £14·9 million. Details on the number of patients are not available.

Birth Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many miscarriages, stillbirths and children born alive were recorded in each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The numbers of live births and stillbirths which occurred in England and Wales from 1988 to 1992 are shown in the table. The total number of miscarriages is not known.

Live and Stillbirths England and Wales 1988-1992

	Live births	Stillbirths
1988	693,577	3,382
1989	687,725	3,236
1990	706,140	3,256
1992	689,656	[1]3,160

[1] The figures given for 1992 include 216 stillbirths of 24 to 27 weeks gestation which occurred between 1 October and 31 December. On 1 October 1992 the legal definition of a stillbirth was altered from a baby born dead after 28 completed weeks gestation or more, to one born dead after 24 completed weeks gestation or more.

Cancer (Specialty Review)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to undertake consultations before deciding whether to implement any recommendations of the specialty review on cancer.

Mr. Sackville: The standard consultation procedures will be followed for any change of use of hospital premises arising from the acceptance of options presented by the review.

Medicines Bodies (Membership)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and positions of the current membership of (a) the Committee on the Review of Medicines, (b) the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, (c) the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, (d) the Medicines Control Agency and (e) the Medicines Commission.

The Committee on the Review of Medicines (CRM) was disestablished on 31 March 1992, following the completion of its review of the safety, quality and efficacy of substances or articles in respect of which product licences of right were granted, in accordance with section 25 of the Medicines Act 1968. The membership of the CRM was published in its last annual report for 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) is an executive agency of the Department of Health. Dr. K. H. Jones, its chief executive and director, is responsible and accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the day to day management of the licensing of medicines for human use and its associated activities—the responsibility of Ministers ('the UK Licensing Authority')—under the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968 and associated European directives.

In accordance with statutory requirements, the annual reports for the MC, CSM, BPC and MCA are presented to Parliament each year.

Referrals

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra-contractual referrals were made and how many were refused in each regional health authority between April 1992 and September 1992.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to be able to announce the chairman and terms of reference of the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Sackville: Professor Dame June Lloyd has today been appointed as chairman of the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee (GTAC). The terms of reference for the committee are as follows:

To consider and advise on the acceptability of proposals for gene therapy research on human subjects, on ethical grounds, taking account of the scientific merits of the proposals and the potential benefits and risks.

To work with other agencies which have responsibilities in this field, including local research ethics committees, and agencies with statutory responsibilities—the Medicines Control Agency, the Health and Safety Executive and the Department of the Environment.

To provide advice to United Kingdom Health Ministers on developments in gene therapy research and their implications.

The membership of GTAC will be announced later.

Elderly People (Abuse)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to issuing model practice guidance on unreported abuse of elderly people for social services departments to issue to their staffs; and what scope she sees for social services departments to offer training on such abuse to all staff involved in direct work with elderly people.

Mr. Yeo: The social services inspectorate has drawn up practice guidelines which will be published this summer.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will undertake a review of legislation on protecting elderly people's property, social workers' powers to intervene in cases of abuse and registration of private domiciliary care; and what action her Department has taken to raise awareness of the extent of unreported abuse of elderly people.

Mr. Yeo: Proposals from the Law Commission "Mentally Incapacitated and Other Vulnerable Adults: Public Law Protection" (Consultation Paper No. 130), which are relevant to areas of concern about elder abuse, have recently been published, and the Department will be responding to the Commission. We have no plans to introduce compulsory registration of domiciliary care agencies.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet the editor of "Community Care" to discuss the prevention of unreported abuse of elderly people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: No, but officials from the social services inspectorate are available to contribute to the "Community Care" magazine's current articles on this subject.

Mr. Graham Pink

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to reimburse Stockport health authority for the costs of pursuing the industrial tribunal claim for unfair dismissal by Mr. Graham Pink.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. Any liability for costs rests with the employing authority.

Suicides

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women committed suicide in each of the last three years for which figures are available; in each case, how many of those suicide victims were homeless; and how many were known to be sufferers from either schizophrenia or another mental illness.

Mr. Sackville: The numbers of (a) men and (b) women who have been recorded as having committed suicide, in each year from 1990 to 1992 are shown in the table. The number of those who have been recorded as having committed suicide and were homeless could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The number who have been recorded as having committed suicide and as being schizophrenic or suffering from another mental illness is not available centrally.

The numbers of (a) men and (b) women who have been recorded as (i) having committed suicide and (ii) having died from an injury where it was undetermined whether that injury was accidentally or purposely inflicted, in 1990-92, England and Wales.

Cause of death	Sex	1990	1991	1992
Suicide and self-inflicted injury	M	2,994	3,007	3,049
(E950-959)	F	956	886	903
Undetermined injury	M	1,338	1,355	1,310
(E980-E989	F	658	699	680

Homelessness

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what medical provision is specifically made available to homeless adults with children in (a) London, (b) Manchester and (c) Liverpool; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: General medical and hospital services are available to homeless people on the same basis as to the rest of the population.

Where the needs of homeless people for general medical services cannot be fully met under the normal arrangements, the Department is funding 30 projects designed to improve their access to primary health care. There are eight projects in the Greater London area and two in the Liverpool area.

The projects aim to improve access to medical services for homeless people, including adults with children. One scheme in Liverpool provides general medical and other health care services to a women's refuge and a child support refuge.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many women aged 50 years and over each year (a) have breast cancer diagnosed, (b) die from breast cancer and (c) receive treatment and survive;

(2) how many women aged under 50 years each year (a) have breast cancer diagnosed, (b) die from breast cancer, and (c) are treated and survive.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given for the number of deaths for the years 1983-1992 and registrations for the years 1983-1987.

The figures for five-years survival rates are published only by 10-year age groups from 1981 registrations, as shown in the table.

Number of deaths for female breast cancer (ICD 174) for England and Wales, 1983-1992

Year	Age group 0-50	50+
1983	1,523	11,149
1984	1,583	11,727
1985	1,534	11,979
1986	1,622	12,019
1987	1,590	12,161
1988	1,678	12,045
1989	1,694	12,314
1990	1,596	12,038
1991	1,555	12,231
1992	1,628	12,035

Number of registrations for female breast cancer (ICD 174), for England and Wales, 1983-1987

Year	Age group 0-50	50+
1983	4,289	17,008
1984	4,284	17,079
1985	4,549	17,515
1986	4,879	17,878
1987	4,866	18,874

Five-year survival rates for female breast cancer (ICD 174), for England and Wales, based on 1981 registrations, (which are only published by 10-year age group)

	Age group 45-54	55-64
Crude 5-year survival rate[1]	64·68	57·13
Relative 5-year survival rate[2]	66·22	60·63

[1] Represents the percentage of registrations alive at the end of each time span with a correction made for those registrations which are withdrawn.

[2] Represents the crude rates adjusted using the life table probability of surviving each time period.

Skin Conditions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those drugs and creams used for the treatment of skin conditions which will be included in the review to be carried out by the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The committee will consider all the drugs that are currently available on the national health service for the treatment of skin conditions. A list of these products is available in the Library.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on infertility treatment by the Gloucestershire district health authority in the latest year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Miss J. O. Trottér, the chairman of Gloucestershire health board for details.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) quadruplets, (iv) quintuplets and (v) sextuplets were born in England and Wales in each year since 1980; what was the total number of maternities in England and Wales in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (a) in-vitro fertilisation, (b) gamete inter-fallopian transfer and (c) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table (England and Wales):

Type of birth	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Twins	6,308	—	6,201	6,293	6,321	6,700	6,969
Triplets	91	—	70	89	80	93	123
Quadruplets	4	—	6	4	5	7	10
Quintuplets	1	—	—	—	—	2	2
Sextuplets	—	—	—	1	—	1	1
Total number of maternities with multiple births	6,404	—	6,277	6,387	6,406	6,803	7,105
Total maternities	654,501	632,350	623,511	626,277	633,965	653,142	657,308

Type of birth	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Twins	7,186	7,452	7,579	7,934	8,160	8,314
Triplets	125	157	183	201	208	202
Quadruplets	7	12	11	10	10	8
Quintuplets	1	1	1	—	2	1
Sextuplets	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total number of maternities with multiple births	7,319	7,622	7,774	8,145	8,380	8,525
Total maternities	677,467	689,153	682,979	701,030	693,857	683,854

Information on multiple maternities is not available for 1981.
Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Information on the number of multiple births attributed to assisted reproduction is not available. However some information on multiple pregnancies is published in the first annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, and in earlier reports of the interim licensing authority, copies of which are available in the Library.

RU486

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require cases where RU486 is used with accompanying prostaglandins to be treated solely at family planning clinics; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the availability of foetal scanning equipment in family planning clinics which administer RU486.

Mr. Sackville: Arrangements for the use of RU486 are set out in the drug data sheet and are subject to the requirements of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended. The provision of equipment in national health service premises is a matter for local decision.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 765, if she will now require regional health authority chairmen to provide substantive answers to hon. Members representing constituencies within the region in respect of requests for information on aspects of regional health authority expenditure.

Mr. Sackville: We do not require the publication of provisional information collected for management purposes. If the hon. Member has had difficulties in obtaining normally available information perhaps he will let me have the details.

Income Support

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is (a) the total amount of the assessed income support claims within the Yorkshire region for 1993-94 and (b) the Yorkshire regional allocation of the DSS transfer funding in respect of terminal illness special rate income support for 1993-94; what assessment has been made of the implications of the difference between (a) and (b) on hospices within the Yorkshire region; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is the methodology used in determining the national allocation of the DSS transfer funding in respect of terminal illness special rate income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information about Department of Social Security (DSS) benefits is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security and for the DSS Benefits Agency. No transfer has been made specifically in relation to terminal illness higher levels of income support (IS). The £5 million transfer from DSS to the health service in respect of hospices was based on the number of hospice patients which it was estimated would have claimed the higher level of IS this year had the previous system continued. It was assumed that there would be about 500 claimants of the higher levels of IS in hospices in Great Britain in mid 1993-94. This was based on a 1991 study by "Help the Hospices", which found that 16 per cent. of hospice patients nationally received the higher levels of IS and that this accounted for about 8 per cent. of hospice income.

The allocation of the central funds from the DSS transfer to each region was based on weighted population. This meant that the funds for 1993-94 do not necessarily relate directly to the amount of IS payments received by hospices in a particular region in the previous year. This is because many hospice patients did not claim the higher levels of IS as their care was being provided free of charge.

Post-trauma Counselling

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to establish a post-trauma counselling service to provide immediate and expert counselling support for all those affected by large-scale tragedies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Post-traumatic stress disorder is a recognised psychiatric condition. General practitioner services are increasingly able to respond to this condition and provide counselling or drug therapy as necessary. Cases may also be referred to the specialist psychiatric services. The Department is supporting from central funds the creation of a new victimology unit at the Maudsley and Bethlem Royal group specialising in post-traumatic stress, including research. We are also funding continuing work at the traumatic stress unit at the Middlesex hospital. These centres constitute an additonal national source of expertise in this condition.

Persistent Vegetative State

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are currently categorised as in a persistent vegetative state; and how many such cases were caused by (a) road traffic accidents, (b) physical assaults and (c) other causes.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally. However, independent estimates suggest there may be about 1,200 cases in total in the United Kingdom.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the names of public appointments that she has made within the Mersey region, giving in each case the body to which the appointment was made, the position held, the relevant qualifications of each appointee and the remuneration that each currently receives.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of public appointments made by the Secretary of State to national health service authorities and trusts within the Mersey region are as listed. Information on appointees' qualifications is not available centrally. Individuals are appointed to NHS authorities and trusts for the personal qualities, knowledge and skills that they bring to the post. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 5 May at column 91 for the present remuneration rates.

Children (Behavioural Problems)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1985, by district health authority, the number of referrals by general practitioners of children with behavioural problems.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally.

SCOTLAND

Sex Offences

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet representatives of rape crisis centres to discuss the conduct of rape and sexual assault cases in the courts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The conduct of rape trials is a matter for my noble and learned Friend the Lord

Advocate and his deputes, who undertake such prosecutions. They and procurators fiscal undertake prosecutions for sexual assault. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is aware of the general views held by rape crisis centres and does not believe that a meeting would serve any particular purpose. If, however, representatives of rape crisis centres care to raise specific points of concern by writing to him, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate will be happy to consider them.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with health board chairmen, chairwomen and officials concerning the implications for their decisions relating to compulsory competitive tendering of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My noble Friend the Minister of State holds regular meetings with health board chairmen at which matters of common concern are discussed. In addition the national competitive tendering group, consisting of health board staff and officials from the NHS management executive in Scotland with responsibility for market testing, meets regularly. Guidance on the application of the regulations was issued to health boards on 11 March and further guidance on market testing will be issued shortly.

Witness Protection

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a witness protection scheme in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce a national witness protection scheme. Provision already exists in law to take action against people who threaten or injure witnesses. Decisions about the level of protection to provide for witnesses in individual cases are an operational matter for the police.

Cervical Screening (Greenock)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent information he has concerning the programme of reviewing of cervical smear slides from Inverclyde royal hospital, Greenock; what methods are being used to locate women who have left Inverclyde; when he expects the whole of the programme, including the re-examination of women recalled by the hospital, to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 May 1993]: Argyll and Clyde health board has informed me that some 12,000 slides have now been re-examined and a further 8,000 have been sent to laboratories for return next week. The board is on target to notify all the women who have been traced through NHS information sources of the results of the re-examination by the beginning of June.

The main method being used to trace women is through the "Community Health Index". The board has also contacted other health authorities and the USA naval authorities. The telephone helpline has also picked up changes of address. It is too early to say whether any outside agencies will be required to assist.

The board is making good progress with the review. The programme is expected to be completed in eight to nine weeks and on present progress will be achieved by the end of June. The preliminary results indicate that 90 per cent. of women have negative results. The majority of others are expected also to have similar results when the results of re-smears or investigations are completed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I met the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme on Thursday 20 May.

Package Travel

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the EC package travel directive; and what measures he intends to take to help small travel operators to meet the demands of this directive.

Mr. Leigh: I have received numerous representations about the EC package travel directive, from trade associations, tour organisers, travel agents and consumer bodies. The implementing regulations were drafted to allow the widest possible measure of choice in meeting the requirement of the directive regarding security for pre-payments and against the cost of repatriation in the event of insolvency in order to help small travel operators.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs have been created by firms which have received a loan under the loan guarantee scheme since 1983; what is the average number of employees employed by firms which have received a loan under the loan guarantee scheme; and how many businesses that received loans under the loan guarantee scheme since 1983 continue to trade.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested on the number of jobs created, and the number of employees employed by firms who have received loans under the loan guarantee scheme is not available.

From June 1981 to 31 December 1992 a total of 32,716 loans were guaranteed, of which 11,890 had defaulted on the loan during the same period. Of the remaining 20,826 loans it is not known how many businesses continued to trade after the loan had been repaid.

Telecommunications Companies

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many telecommunications companies are licensed in the United Kingdom; and how many of them are based (a) in the United States or (b) other foreign countries.

Mr. Leigh: Around 900 licences have been issued under the Telecommunications Act since it was passed in 1984, although not all remain in force. Companies may also operate under a number of "class" licences: these are generally applicable and are not issued in respect of individual companies. Information relating to the location and corporate nationality of licensed companies is thus not readily available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost. A list of licences is held at the library of the Office of Telecommunications.

BNFL

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department has given to the serious crime squad of Cheshire police in its investigation into alleged financial irregularities at BNFL.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 19 May, Official Report, column 228.

Company Turnover Statistics

Mr. Willetts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies traded in the last year for which figures are available, with an annual turnover in the ranges (a) less than £37,600, (b) £37,600 to £50,000, (c) £50,000 to £100,000, (d) £100,000 to £200,000, (e) £200,000 to £300,000 and (f) above £300,000.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The latest information, on United Kingdom companies based on VAT data, is given in the table. It is not available in the ranges requested.

Number of VAT registered companies and public corporations in 1992

Turnover size £ (Thousand)	Number of corporate business
0	30,000
1-25	61,000
26-49	72,000
50-99	62,000
100-249	100,000
250-499	76,000
500+	166,000
Total	567,000

Small Firms' Awards

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small firms merit award for research and technology stage 1 and stage 2 awards were won by companies in each region of the United Kingdom over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Between May 1992 and April this year the number of stage 1 and stage 2 small firms merit awards for research and technology (SMART) scheme were as follows:

Region	Stage 1	Stage 2
East	17	7
East Midlands	17	7
North East	8	3
Northern Ireland	6	3
North West	16	10
Scotland	17	13
South East	31	20
South West	20	13
Wales	16	8
West Midlands	18	14
Yorks/Humberside	14	10
Total	180	108

There have been a record number of entries to this year's SMART stage 1 competition. When the 180 winners are announced at the end of July over 1,000 projects will have been supported under the scheme since its inception in 1986.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to announce those areas to be designated as assisted areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 6 May, Official Report, column 206.

Departmental Staff

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many officials were employed by his Department to administer, inspect, regulate and advise businesses either directly, in agencies or on special contracts (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On 1 April 1992 there was some 8,050 staff in the Department—including agencies and trading funds—engaged in these activities and some 8,000 on 1 April 1993.

Council of Industry Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-East (Mr. Congdon) on 13 May, Official Report, columns 533-34, what were the voting figures for each member state recorded in the meeting of the EC's Council of Industry Ministers held on 4 May.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 May 1993]: No formal votes were taken at the EC Council of Industry Ministers on 4 May.

Rolls Royce plc

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the value of financial support to Rolls Royce plc from his Department in the last available financial year; under what programmes that support was provided; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the value of aero engine launch aid receipts from Rolls Royce plc in (a) the last financial year, (b) in total since 1979 and (c) in total since 1972; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 May 1993]: My Department provided a total of £6,287,529 in financial support for Rolls Royce plc in the year ending 31 March 1993 under a number of schemes.

The value of aeroengine launch aid receipts received by the Department of Trade and Industry from Rolls Royce plc are as follows:

(a) £32·9 million was received in the last financial year ending 31 March 1993;
(b) £209·4 million has been received since 1979. Launch aid payments by the Government to Rolls Royce over the same period were £454·7 million;
(c) £239·4 million has been received since 1972. Launch aid payments to Rolls Royce over the same period were £580·9 million.

Aero Engines (United States)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of financial support to the United States aero engine manufacturers by the United States Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 May 1993]: The United States aeroengine industry receives no direct financial support from the United States Government. However, indirect support, primarily from NASA and the Department of Defense for research and development, is estimated by the United Kingdom industry to be approximately $700 million per annum. The high level of indirect support provided by the United States Government to its aircraft industry is one reason why the United Kingdom strongly supported the EC/United States agreement on trade in civil aircraft reached last year.

Small Businesses

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make borrowing easier for small businesses seeking to expand after the recession.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 May 1993]: Significant improvements to the loan guarantee scheme, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement, will be introduced from 1 July. There is an increase in the guarantee level from 70 per cent. to 85 per cent. aimed at those who lack security to offer against a loan. Also, for established businesses with a track record, the maximum loan size will be increased to £250,000. For all businesses, the premium payable to the DTI, by borrowers, will be reduced to 1·5 per cent. of the outstanding loan in respect of variable rate lending, to 0·5 per cent. in respect of fixed rate lending and to 0·5 per cent. for borrowers in inner city task forces and city challenge areas.

The Government are supporting five projects which are looking at ways of bringing together business angels—informal investors—and small businesses seeking investment.

DEFENCE

LPH Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the source of the main propulsion engines for the LPH helicopter carrier; and what plans he has to encourage United Kingdom companies to offer to undertake their manufacture.

Mr. Aitken: The selection of the main propulsion engines for this ship is the responsibility of the prime contractor, VSEL, which has invited tenders from a number of engine manufacturers including United Kingdom companies. Industry was made aware of this opportunity by means of an MOD contract bulletin published in March 1992.

Sub-strategic Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 May, Official Report, column 20, what specific contribution sub-strategic nuclear weapons make towards the United Kingdom's deterrence posture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The sub-strategic nuclear capability ensures the coherence of our overall deterrent posture by providing the essential link between conventional and strategic nuclear forces.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the number of sub-strategic nuclear weapons deployed by Russia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Many Russian sub-strategic forces are being withdrawn from service and are earmarked for destruction, but it is estimated that some 12,000 warheads remain. Many of these are not assessed as being fully operational.

WE177

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his statement of 27 October 1992, Official Report, column 858, when he expects to make an announcement regarding a possible future replacement for the WE177.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 20 May 1993 Official Report, column 263.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions have been taken by his Department following paragraph 12 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 to ensure that the WE177 will remain serviceable well into the first decade of the next century.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We maintain a continuing monitoring programme of our stockpile of WE177 free fall bombs to assess their remaining life. Based on this, we now expect that the WE177 will remain safe and serviceable well into the first decade of the next century.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when was the last occasion on which the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates" was debated by the House of Commons;

(2) how many times since 1963 the annual defence estimates have not been debated by the House of Commons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These are matters of public record.

Conventional Forces

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the balance of conventional forces between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Russia in (i) infantry, (ii) main battle tanks, (iii) armoured combat vehicles and (iv) combat aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: National declarations by signatories of the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty show that between the Atlantic and the Urals, the following forces are held by NATO and Russia at 1 January 1993:

	Personnel	Main battle tanks	Armoured combat vehicles	Combat aircraft
NATO	2,590,784	23,424	32,255	4,901
Russia[1]	1,298,299	8,893	18,834	4,387

[1] These figures represent the forces of Russia only and do not include the forces of the other countries in the former Soviet Union or the forces of the countries of the former Warsaw pact.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Trident is capable of fulfilling the role of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 May, Official Report, column 19.

Templeton Airfield

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use is made of the three communication aerials on Templeton airfield for purposes other than for his Department's communications.

Mr. Aitken: The aerials are used solely for defence purposes.

Nuclear Convoy (Erskine Bridge)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the breakdown of a nuclear convoy on the Erskine bridge on 18 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A military convoy stopped near the Erskine bridge on 18 May while a defective tractor unit was inspected and replaced. At no time was there any danger to the public or convoy personnel. It is long-standing Government policy not to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons at any particular place or time.

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those forms of advice and assistance provided by the British Frontier Service for soldiers serving in the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British frontier services provides advice to the British military authorities in Germany on a variety of customs and immigration issues; it also advises and, where appropriate, assists individual service personnel, United Kingdom-based civilians and their dependants on these matters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (Automated Credit Transfer)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, columns 445-46, on automated credit transfer, if he will publish details of the type of building society or bank account held by 65 per cent. of pensioners and benefit recipients currently paid through the post office; and what percentage of these are savings accounts.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. A limited survey was carried out in July 1991 on the type of accounts held by recipients of retirement pension, income support and child benefit only; information on recipients of other benefits is not available. The research asked only about accounts that were suitable for automated credit transfer—ACT—payments, and those that were not are excluded. It should also be noted that the income support figures contain a number of customers paid by girocheque, not all of whom may actually use the post office.

The information available is in the tables. Totals exceed 100 per cent. because many people have more than one type of account.

Income Maintenance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has for the overall cost of provision for income maintenance in Wales; and if he will indicate (a) the estimated cash expenditures, (b) the estimated tax expenditures and (c) the estimated costs of administration.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The only income maintenance cash expenditure information available specifically for people residing in Wales is expenditure on housing benefit and income support. The latest available expenditure figures are £380 million for housing benefit[1] for 1992-93 and £442 million for income support[2] for 1989-90. The latest estimates for personal tax allowances and tax relief on earnings and investments, excluding MIRAS, are around £6,740 million for 1990-91.

The latest estimate for the cost of the administration of all social security benefits by the Benefits Agency in Wales is £55·3 million for 1992-93. The estimated budget for the administration of tax in Wales for 1993-94 is £78 million[3].

Benefit Costs

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the daily equivalent cost per working person of spending on social security.

Mr. Burt: Based on estimates of the grand total of social security spending for 1993-94, the daily equivalent cost per working person is around £13.

Computerisation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of savings in costs and time brought about by the computerisation within his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has achieved some £124 million savings from its computerisation programme operational strategy over the four years up to 1991-92, the latest date for which figures are available.

Over the same period, there have been corresponding improvements in claims clearance times for those benefits which changed from a clerical to a computerised system, as follows:

	Clerical System 1987-88 Days	Computerised System 1991-92 Days
IS Claims	6·1	4·0
RP Claims	24·7	15·8

Income Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women (i) under and (ii) over pensionable age are dependent on income support in Wales.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Numbers receiving income support in Wales

	Claimants and partners under age 60	Claimants and partners aged 60 and over	Total
Men	108,000	27,000	135,000
Women	124,000	80,000	204,000
Total	232,000	107,000	339,000

Notes:

1. Source: Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry May 1992.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. For the purposes of this reply the term "pensionable age" has been defined as 60 years old, this is consistent with the age at which Pensioner Premiums become payable with Income Support.

Compensation Scheme

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much compensation was paid to benefit recipients by the Benefits Agency in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will break this figure down by benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest year for which definitive figures are available is 1991-92.

A breakdown of the figures is only available for five benefits. The figures for these benefits are as follows:

Benefit	Amount paid (£'s)
Maternity allowance	294
Retirement pension	177,367
Widows benefit/pension	31,242
Invalidity benefit	80,639
Income support	459,849
Total	749,391

Figures for the remaining benefits are not kept separately.

Concessionary Bus Passes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when was the last occasion that Walsall council contacted his Department regarding the concessionary bus pass for those in receipt of the disability living allowance; what advice was given to the council in this respect; and if a Minister will now write to the council;

(2) what action his Department will be taking if a council refuses to follow its advice regarding those entitled to the concessionary bus pass;

(3) pursuant to his answer on 7 May, Official Report, column 299, what has been the latest response received from Walsall council regarding allowing those in receipt of the disability living allowance to have the concessionary bus pass.

Mr. Scott: Walsall metropolitan borough council wrote to the Department on 10 May with the observations of the council's lawyers on section 73(14) of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992. The Department is engaged in negotiations with the Council in an attempt to come to an agreement as to the scope of section 73(14) and its applicability to the council's concessionary fare scheme. The Department will consider, at the conclusion of those negotiations, whether further action is necessary.

Appeals Tribunals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals sought appeals in (a) social security appeals tribunals and (b) medical appeals tribunals in the last year for which figures are available in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole; and what were the results of these appeals.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested since national administrative appeal statistics for appeal tribunals are not available for areas smaller than a former social security region; and since available figures give details of workflows rather than the outcome of individual appeals. The last full year for which figures are available is 1991. The table provides details for Scotland as a whole.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ballyconnnell Canal

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the Intereg funding for projects in Northern Ireland for each of the last three years; what is the projection for the current year; what sums were expended on the Ballyconnell canal joint project; and what percentage of the total sums donated to Northern Ireland this represented.

Mr. Mates: EC funding from the Northern Ireland/ Ireland Intereg programme is designed to assist both cross-border projects and projects which fall within the eligible areas of either member state.

The figures in the table show EC funding expended by Northern Ireland under Intereg since the initiative was approved in July 1991.

	Northern Ireland expenditure under Intereg £ million	Northern Ireland Intereg expenditure on Ballyconnell canal £ million	Percentage
1991	4·9	0·5	10
1992	8·9	0·9	10
[1]1993	18·4	—	—
TOTAL	32·2	1·3	4

[1] Represents a projected figure and assumes that the value of the pound will remain 1·256 against the ecu.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the sums expended on the Ballyconnell canal joint project was expended on administration and support services; and how much on actual construction and remedial works.

Mr. Hanley: The Ballyconnell canal joint project is estimated to cost IR£30 million. Cumulative expenditure at 31 March was IR£23·69 million. This was in respect of feasibility studies and site investigations, land acquisition costs, construction costs, site supervision and project management costs incurred by the Electricity Supply Board in the Republic of Ireland. The Northern Ireland contribution to the project is capped at IR£2·4 million and cumulative expenditure at 31 March 1993 was IR£2·3 million. Details of the administrative overhead costs incurred by the two sponsoring Governments in overseeing the project are not available.

Charities

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to introduce legislation which will enable the Government to collect and release information about the charitable status of organisations in Northern Ireland and which will bring that part of the United Kingdom into line with England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Mates: The Government are reviewing the law relating to charities in Northern Ireland and this review will include the arrangements for the provision of information on charities to the public. Any proposals for a change in legislation will be presented in due course and consultation will take place in the normal way.

Fire Sprinkler Systems

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistics he has on the effectiveness against fire of sprinkler systems fitted to buildings in Northern Ireland, including the percentage of occasions on which they fail to operate, or operate inadequately.

Mr. Atkins: There are no statistics available on sprinkler effectiveness. However the fire brigade reports that, in its experience, operational failures are extremely rare and that sprinkler systems provide a highly reliable method of automatically controlling fire.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the effect of blast on sprinkler systems fitted to buildings in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Depending on the severity and location of a blast and whether it is accompanied by fire, a sprinkler system may either be unaffected, or be activated by mechanical disturbance or fire, or be disabled as a result of damage to the building structure or the water supply to the system.

The fire brigade reports that, in practice, blasts caused by bombs or blast incendiaries have had little detrimental effect on the operation of sprinkler systems.

Interview Expenses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have received travelling expenses from the Training and Employment Agency for travel to a job interview in each of the last three years;

(2) how many people who received travelling expenses in each of the last three years from the Training and Employment Agency to attend a first job interview and who have been shortlisted for a second interview have been unable to attend because travelling expenses funding has not been allowed for a second interview.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question is a matter for the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 20 May 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to state how many people have received travelling expenses from the Training and Employment Agency for travel to a job interview in each of the last three years.

The Information you requested is as follows:—

Financial Year	Number of Approved Applicants
1990-91	1,124
1991-92	1,363
1992-93	1,256

In a further question you asked how many of those included in the above who received assistance from the Training and Employment Agency to attend a first job interview and were short listed for a second interview were unable to attend because travelling expenses funding was not allowed.

All applicants who apply to the Training and Employment Agency for assistance under the Travel to Interview Scheme are formally advised of the conditions which relate to entitlement for support prior to this being given. These conditions are, that the applicant must not have had assistance under the Scheme for a previous interview for the same job. This arises from the fact that as limited funds are available, it is not possible to help at every stage of a lengthy selection procedure. Second interview applications are not accepted and as a result no statistical information is available in this area.

Building Regulations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 19 January Official Report, column 175, if the European Commission has yet completed its consideration of his proposals for amendment to parts E and EE of the Building Regulations (NI) 1990; and what observations the European Commission has made.

Mr. Atkins: The proposed amendments to parts E and EE of the Building Regulations (NI) 1990 have not yet been submitted to the European Commission.

Hostel Accommodation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of stay for single occupants of hostel accommodation funded by the DHSS in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: While the Department of Health and Social Services provides housing benefit assistance to many hostel residents, it does not fund hostel accommodation in Northern Ireland.

This is, instead, a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I have been advised by the chairman that although an average figure based on the length of stay of all single persons on hostel accommodation is not readily available, it is estimated that single persons who have been accepted as homeless and in priority need under the terms of the Housing (NI) Order 1988, and placed in hostel accommodation by the Executive, spend an average of 8·6 weeks there before being permanently rehoused.

Building Regulations

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to take account of the effects of the amendment to the England and Wales Approved Document B (Building Regulations, Fire) before deciding whether it should be followed in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Northern Ireland Building Regulations closely reflect and are based on the equivalent regulations in England and Wales. In deciding that the fire safety requirements developed for England and Wales, and expressed in approved document B, should be adopted for Northern Ireland, account has been taken of the development of those requirements, the approved document in its final form and of experience of its operation since it came into force on 1 June 1992. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will continue to monitor the operation and effectiveness of the fire safety requirements of the England and Wales regulations.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent assessment has been made of the sufficiency of the length of time of fire resistance required for a commercial building over 30 m in height in the proposed Northern Ireland Building Regulations (Fire) to offer adequate escape time in the case of fire arising from a terrorist incident.

Mr. Atkins: No specific studies have been undertaken of escape times required in the case of fires arising from terrorist incidents. However, experience of fires shows that there is little difference in growth rates between fires arising from such incidents and those arising from other causes, apart from the initial intensity. Northern Ireland Building Regulations presently require commercial premises over 28 m high to have two hours, fire resistance; they do not require the premises to be sprinklered. The proposed new regulations would require buildings over 30 m high to have the same fire resistance for elements of structure as currently required, reducing to a minimum of 90 minutes for elements not forming part of the structural frame, and in addition, would require all such premises to be sprinklered.

EMPLOYMENT

Acquired Rights

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's implementation of the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 19 January Official Report column. 183, to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett). The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill will shortly receive its Third Reading in the House of Lords.

Youth Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the supply and demand of youth training places in each training and enterprise council area on a monthly basis for the last six months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the availability of youth training places is not collected nationally. However, I am satisfied that there is sufficient YT provision available to meet demand. Information on the total demand for YT places is also not collected, but the number of young people who are registered with careers services in England, who are covered by the YT guarantee and have been waiting for a YT place for eight or more weeks in March and April is shown in the table. Information for the previous months is not reliable.

Employment Statistics

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the numbers (a) employed and (b) self-employed; and what the equivalent figures were 12 months previously.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom

(Thousands)

Year	[1]Employed	Self-employed
December 1991	22,614	3,066
December 1992	21,992	2,936

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest percentage and actual figures for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom for (i) all adults and (ii) males aged 16 years or over recorded as economically inactive.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The latest estimates from the labour force survey—not seasonally adjusted—are given in the table:

Labour Force Survey

WALES

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to publish a regularly updated list of deletions and additions to the list of members of Welsh non-departmental public bodies whom he (a) appoints or (b) advises on; and how many such names will appear in the first such list as an update to the list he published in answer to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 23 March, Official Report, columns 549-50.

Mr. David Hunt: New appointments which I make to public bodies in Wales are regularly announced in my Department's press notices which are available in the Library of the House.

Income Statistics

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) the top decile male earnings as a percentage of median male earnings, (b) the bottom decile male earnings as a percentage of median male earnings, (c) the top decile female earnings as a percentage of median female earnings and (d) the bottom decile female earnings as a percentage of median female earnings in Wales in (i) 1979, (ii) 1984, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is published in table 116 of part E of the new earnings survey. A copy for each of the years concerned is available in the Library of the House.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men and (b) women were in employment in Wales in each year since 1984; and if he will indicate the number which were (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) full-time self-employed, (d) part-time self-employed and (e) on Government employment and training programmes.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for men and women in employment and those on work-related Government training programmes may be accessed on-line by the staff in the Library of the House, although information distinguishing between full and part-time male employment was available in census of employment years only prior to 1989.

Estimates of the number of self-employed which are derived from the labour force survey and which may be subject to sampling variability are given in the table:

Education Spending

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of county council spending in Wales was allocated to education; and what proportion of the total spending of each county council in Wales was allocated to education for each of the last 10 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: County council spending on education as a proportion of total county council spending on all rate/general fund services is given in the table. Figures are available on a consistent basis only for the last eight years.

University of Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the student-tutor ratio in each of the colleges within the current structure of the university of Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on staff and students at the colleges of the university of Wales is collated and published by the "Universities Statistical Record"—USR.

The ratios, shown in the table, are calculated as defined in the USR publications. Information for 1991 onwards has not yet been published.

Pregnant Women

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of pregnant women who have been dismissed from employment (a) with less than two years' service to the employer and (b) with more than two years' service.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Water Bill Debts

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many county court judgments have been obtained for water bill debts in Wales in each year from 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the water supply companies serving Wales.

Pharmacies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner practices run their own pharmacies in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The description "pharmacy" may be used only in respect of premises registered under the Medicines Act 1968. I am not aware of any GPs in Wales who run their own pharmacies.

All GPs may personally administer appliances or drugs, other than scheduled drugs, to their patients, and they are obliged to provide such appliances or drugs which are needed for the immediate treatment of a patient before provision can otherwise be obtained.

In addition, a GP can provide pharmaceutical services to a patient on his or her list where the patient has requested this and a number of conditions, which are specified in regulations, are met. The number of GPs providing pharmaceutical services under these arrangements in each family health services authority is given as follows:

Number of General Practitioners providing pharmaceutical services to their patients, as at 1 April 1992

	Number
Clwyd	51
Dyfed	17
Gwent	38
Gwynedd	57
Mid Glamorgan	20
Powys	47
South Glamorgan	8
West Glamorgan	5

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pharmacies there are in each county of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table.

	Number of pharmacies[1]
Clwyd	88
Dyfed	99
Gwent	96
Gwynedd	62
Mid Glamorgan	142
Powys	23
South Glamorgan	99
West Glamorgan	98

NHS Staff (Attacks)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of violent attacks that have been committed against health service staff on hospital premises in Wales in each year from 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been convicted of committing violent attacks against health service staff within hospital premises in Wales in each year from 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These figures are not held centrally.

Hospitals (Thefts)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what has been the number of reported thefts from each acute treatment hospital in Wales in each year from 1988;

(2) what estimates he has of the cost to the national health service in Wales stemming from reported thefts from hospitals in each year from 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Child Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the training and enterprise councils in Wales taking part in the Government scheme to develop child care facilities for the over-fives.

Sir Wyn Roberts: 1993-94 is the first year in which the new out of school child care grant will be available. Welsh training and enterprise councils were consulted about how the initiative should be developed in the first year, and agreed that the work should be co-ordinated by the Chwarae Teg/Fair Play consortium with five TECs participating: Gwent, South Glamorgan, Mid Glamorgan, West Wales and Powys. The remaining TECs will be able to take part in 1994-95.

Traffic, Builth Wells

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 117, what assessment he has made of the average time taken by a motorist to drive through Builth Wells in (a) February and (b) August.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Such assessments are made only in months little affected by seasonal traffic: April, May, June, September and October. The average journey times on the trunk roads between the limits of the proposed Builth Wells by pass were 181 seconds for the A470 and 340 seconds for the A483.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if an environmental impact study has been undertaken into the proposed Builth Wells bypass.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An environmental appraisal of viable routes for a possible bypass of Builth Wells has been undertaken.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer on 5 May, Official Report, column 117, what is the average annual road accident figure; and how many road accidents took place in Builth Wells in 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The average annual number of accidents that occurred in Builth Wells over the last five years on the A470 and A483 trunk roads, within the limits of the proposed bypass, was eight. The provisional number for 1992, within the same limits, is nine.

A470

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on current plans for the improvement on the A470 between Betws-y-coed and Blaenau Ffestiniog.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales" shows improvements in the Lledr valley are programmed for the short and medium term. Work on the Minffordd to Cancoed section is currently expected to start before April 1996 and the remainder before March 1999, subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Farmers and Fishermen

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many officials were employed by his Department to administer, inspect, regulate and advise the farming and fishing industries either directly, in agencies or on special contracts (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest available date; how many people are involved in (i) farming and (ii) fishing, full or part time, in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the numbers of staff in the Welsh Office and its agencies, and the number of people involved in farming and fishing in Wales is set out in the departmental report, Cm 2215, which is available in the Library of the House. Although it is not possible to isolate the staff resources denoted to the specific activities listed by my hon. Friend, the report does contain detailed information on the functions performed by the Department and the resources consumed. The most recent information on the numbers involved in farming is given in Welsh Office press notice published on 6 January 1993.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 363, if he has yet received the report of his working party on one-stop shops; and if he will make it his policy to place a copy in the Library.

Mr. David Hunt: The working group will report to me shortly. I will announce my decisions in due course and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Dentists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of dentists have withdrawn from the provision of NHS dental treatment for all except exempt categories since 1 April; what is the number of salaried dentists appointed by each family health service authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is not available in the form requested. Returns provided by family health services authorities indicated that between 27 March and 7 May 1993, five dentists left authorities' dental lists as a direct result of the new fee scale introduced on 8 July 1992. Twelve dentists joined dental lists during the same period. This information was provided for managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Approval has been given for Dyfed and Gwynedd family health services authorities to employ a total of six whole-time equivalent salaried dentists. Both authorities are in the process of identifying suitable applicants and premises.

Withybush General Hospital

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will initiate an inquiry into the reasons why Withybush general hospital's roof needs substantial repair; who will supervise the repairs; what is the estimated cost of supervision; what will be the cost of the repair; who will pay for it; and which organisation supervised the construction of the new roof.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a contractual matter which is being pursued by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. The contractor has accepted responsibility for the remedial work to the roof and the authority is seeking to recover any indirect costs that may accrue in order that the work will be completed at no cost to the Pembrokeshire National Health Service Trust. Supervision of the remedial work remains the responsibility of the architects for the scheme.

Data Protetion

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has not been subject to any investigations by the Data Protection Registrar.

EC Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of grants received from the European Community, by each local authority in Wales in 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racial Attacks

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases referred by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service during the last year, an element or allegation of racial motivation has been identified by the police; and how many of these cases were brought to court.

The Attorney-General: The code for crown prosecutors requires that racial motivation be regarded by crown prosecutors as an aggravating feature when considering in particular cases where the public interest requires a prosecution. Such motivation can be found in a wide range of offences. The Crown Prosecution Service does not maintain records in a form which enables the information sought by the hon. Member to be obtained other than at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Affairs Select Committee has published 30 reports since April 1989. The Government responses are contained in the following Command Papers, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Unit Fines

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment was made of the result of the pilot schemes for unit fines under the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and whether he will publish the results.

Mr. Jack: Such an assessment was made and published in Home Office Research paper 59: "Unit Fines: Experiments in Four Courts", a copy of which is in the Library.

Arrests (Soccer Matches)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were arrested at soccer matches in each season from 1989-90.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information for matches in England and Wales is contained in the following table:

	Arrests
	1991-92	1990-91	1989-90
Football League	5,006	4,122	5,945

Auto Glass Cup	71	135	[1]—
Total	6,487	5,589	[1]—

[1] Information not available.
Information on the 1992-93 season is not yet available.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet leaders of the Fire Brigades Union to discuss wage negotiating procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Fire Brigades Union, at their request, on 17 March to discuss the Government's policy on public sector pay this year. The negotiation of firefighters' pay is not a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend. Firefighters' pay and conditions of service are matters for the local authorities which employ firefighters, and are negotiated in the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps will be taken to discourage the recruitment of Home Office personnel by firms tendering for Home Office businesses.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend would not wish to discourage such moves provided there is no impropriety involved.

Police and Fire Services

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount of expenditure on (a) police, (b) fire and (c) other services within the responsibility of his Department in (i) England, (ii) Greater London and (iii) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year since 1982-83, including estimates for 1992-93, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Details of expenditure on these services from 1984-85 to 1992-93 are given in the table. Information in respect of the first two years is not readily available. The figures given for capital represent total expenditure; authorities have to decide the sources of finance only in aggregate. So it is not possible to identify the use of credit approvals for particular services.

[1]Probation, emergency planning, other courts, registration of electors and school crossing patrols.
[2]Taken as comprising Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, East Sussex, Essex, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Isle of Wight, Kent, Oxfordshire, Surrey and West Sussex.
[3]Expenditure on the Metropolitan Police: the Metropolitan Police District includes parts of Essex, Hertfordshire and Surrey.

Fire Service, Marchington

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who maintains the vehicles of the emergency fire service based at Marchington near Uttoxeter, Staffordshire; when any such contract was granted; and when it is due to expire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A contract with TNT Express (UK) Ltd. to store and maintain the emergency fire service stockpile for a period of five years commenced on 1 July 1991. The Home Office has an option to extend the period of the contract to a maximum of 10 years.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the establishments providing secure accommodation for juvenile offenders that he has visited since taking his present office.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Feltham young offenders institution on 25 September 1992 and has plans to visit a secure intensive support unit run by a local authority social services department next month. On his behalf, and since the beginning of this year, I have myself visited secure facilities at Orchard lodge in Southwark, the St. Charles centre in Essex, the Nightingale unit at Feltham young offenders institution and Lisnevin training school in Northern Ireland.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he received the research report from Sheffield university, prepared for his Department, on the prevalence of drug use among young people.

Mr. Jack: The research report from Sheffield university was received in draft form in January. It is being prepared for publication later this year.

South Manchester College

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department of the judgment in the case of Kenny and Woodroffe v. South Manchester college.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 24 March 1993, Sir Michael Ogden held in the case of Kenny and Woodroffe v. South Manchester college that the European Community acquired rights directive applied to the transfer from one undertaking to another of education provision at Thorn Cross young offender institution.

The Prison Service has a clear, significant and legitimate interest in the judgment. Counsel was instructed by the Treasury Solicitor to attend the hearing and to maintain a watching brief for the Prison Service. If the judgment is upheld on appeal, it will affect the amount of public money which the Prison Service will need to pay contractors for the future provision of education services in prison establishments. A protective notice of appeal has now been lodged by South Manchester college. The Prison Service is meeting the college's legal costs in relation to the appeal.

A note will be added in due course to the 1993-94 appropriation account in accordance with the principles set out in "Government Accounting", section 12.6.12.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the Metropolitan police have been subject to an investigation by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint; when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by the police to ensure future compliance with the principle.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The Data Protection Registrar has recorded eight complaints against the Metropolitan police. They are as follows:

(1) 6 April 1987
Alleged contravention of Principle 5:
Personal data shall be accurate and, where necessary, kept up to date.
(2) 18 January 1988
Alleged contravention of Principle 3:
Personal data held for any purpose or purposes shall not be used or disclosed in a manner incompatible with the purpose.
(3) 8 January 1988
(4) 8 January 1992
(5) 19 October 1992
Alleged contravention of Principle 7:
An individual shall be entitled (a) at reasonable intervals and without undue delay or expense —(i) to be informed by any data user whether he holds personal data of which that individual is the subject; and (ii) to access to any such data held by a user; and (b) where appropriate, to have such data corrected or erased.
(6) 13 May 1991
Alleged cases of unauthorised disclosure
(7) 4 August 1992
(8) 27 February 1991
Alleged breach of Section 5(2)

In no case has the registrar considered it necessary to serve an enforcement notice on the commissioner. The commissioner keeps compliance with the law under review and ensures that policy, practice and training reflect statutory requirements.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Stratford-on-Avon

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has on (a) how many people visit Stratford-on-Avon every year and (b) what proportion of those visitors attend performances by the Royal Shakespeare Company.

Mr. Key: According to the leisure day visits survey, there were 4 million day visits by United Kingdom residents to Stratford-on-Avon in 1988-89. It is not known how many United Kingdom residents stayed overnight in Stratford-on-Avon, but according to the 1991 United Kingdom tourism survey, there were 800,000 trips to Warwickshire involving an overnight stay.

In addition, according to the international passenger survey, there were 133,000 visits of one night or more by overseas residents to Stratford-on-Avon in 1991. It is not known how many overseas residents visited Stratford while staying elsewhere.

The sources for the foregoing data do not identify what proportion of visits involved attendance at a performance by the Royal Shakespeare Company, but the latest available data show that in 1991-92 553,000 tickets were sold at the Royal Shakespeare Company's three theatres in Stratford-on-Avon.

Digital Television Technology

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the television industry on the development of a strategy for the introduction of digital television technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None, but preliminary discussions are taking place with officials, both in my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration he is giving to increasing the purchase grants of the national museums and galleries and the National Heritage Memorial Fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We review all public expenditure programmes each year in the light of what we can afford. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce the results in the autumn Budget.

Royal Parks

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many nurseries are currently being operated for the royal parks; and what was the position three years ago;

(2) for how long the nursery at Greenwich park has been disused; and what are his proposals for the area of the park formerly occupied by the nursery;

(3) if he will estimate the proportion of plants for use in the royal parks which are currently being imported from overseas suppliers; and what was the comparable figure three years ago;

(4) if he will provide an estimate of the amount of time being allocated by the contractor in each of the royal parks to the supervision of apprentices; and what were the figures three years ago.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 24 May 1993

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Written Parliamentary Questions asking:

> (i) how many nurseries are currently being operated for the Royal Parks; and what was the position three years ago;
> (ii) for how long the nursery at Greenwich Park has been disused; and what are his proposals for the area of the park formerly occupied by the nursery;
> (iii) if he will estimate the proportion of plants for use in the Royal Parks which are currently being imported from overseas suppliers; and what was the comparable figure three years ago; and
> (iv) if he will provide an estimate of the amount of time being allocated by the contractor in each of the Royal Parks to the supervision of apprentices; and what were the figures three years ago.

Three years ago there were nurseries in Hyde, Regent's, Greenwich and Richmond Parks. Following the contracting out of the Royal Parks nursery production work in 1992 only the Hyde Park nursery remains in use by the contractors who also make use of their own premises.

The Greenwich Park nursery was de-commissioned in June 1992 and I am currently considering a proposal by our landscape architects to combine the site with the deer enclosure, to create an historic animal enclosure. In the short term, we are looking at the possible use of part of the nursery area by a local charity dealing with the rehabilitation of disabled people.

Less than 2 per cent. of all plants supplied to the Royal Parks each year are imported. Imports represent a very small proportion of the cuttings propagated by our nursery contractor. Before June 1992, all plants were propagated within the Royal Parks.

Under the terms of the nursery and grounds maintenance contracts all apprentices are required to be supervised by a member of the contractors' own staff. Before 1992 apprentices were directly employed by the Department and supervised by Royal Parks staff. Information is not available on the time allocated. We have employed the former Director of Studies at the Royal Botanical Gardens, Kew, to advise us on apprentice training. He will be speaking to each apprentice to ensure that the training they receive is appropriate and suitable. In addition we are talking to the Royal Horticultural society to negotiate some practical training at their gardens in Wisley.

As a former apprentice myself, I am very keen that our scheme should be managed in the best tradition.

Television Reception

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of the land area of England is not served by broadcasts by (a) independent television and (b) BBC television.

Mr. Brooke: Broadcasters determine transmitter coverage to serve resident populations rather than areas of land. About 99·4 per cent. of the United Kingdom population is able to receive both BBC and independent television services.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what offers in lieu of tax have been accepted or allocated since his announcement of 23 April, Official Report, column 227.

Mr. Brooke: Since my last announcement on 23 April, Official Report, column 227, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of two surrealist hats by Eileen Agar in lieu of taxation, which will satisfy £3,500 tax. I am also pleased to announce the allocation of an offer comprising a collection of silver and nine sporting paintings. The collection of silver will go to the Victoria and Albert museum, except for two candlesticks which will be allocated to the Museum of London. The sporting paintings will be allocated to the British Sporting Art trust, for display at the National Horseracing museum, Newmarket, except for one painting, "Sittingbourne with S. Rogers 2nd, West Australian with F. Butler winner of the Derby 1853" by Henry Alken, which will go to the Doncaster museum. The surrealist hats will go to the Victoria and Albert museum in accordance with the condition on which the offer was made.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the breakdown of departmental expenditure between the occupied royal palaces in the latest available year.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The figures for property services in 1992-93 are as follows:

	£ million
Buckingham Palace	3·138
Windsor Castle	9·698
St. James's Palace and Clarence House	1·650
Kensington Palace	0·513
Utilities, wages and other costs not broken down by palace	8·137

	£ million
Total	23·136

The figures for Windsor castle includes the costs of a major refurbishment programme and of initial clearance and stabilisation work in the fire damaged area.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

South Africa

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the ODA budget for the Republic of South Africa in the current financial year; and what proportion he plans to disburse on higher education.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We spent over £10 million on development assistance for black South Africans in 1992-93, and aim to increase spending in 1993-94. About 64 per cent. of 1992-93 expenditure was on higher education, including training awards in a variety of different sectors.

TRANSPORT

A550

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the photographs accompanying the publication of formal proposals for phases 1 and 2 of the A550 improvements was taken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Friday 24 August 1990.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will quantify traffic on (a) the A550 during the recent signposted diversion during roadworks at Queensferry and (b) for the same area prior to the diversion.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Average daily traffic flows:

(i) During recent diversion—
Hooton—11,000 vehicles per day
Deeside Park—35,000 vehicles per day

(ii) Prior to diversion—
Hooton—11,300 vehicles per day
Deeside Park—39,500 vehicles per day

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement detailing the conclusions drawn after the public consultation exercise into phase 3 of proposals for improvements to the A550.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: That there was substantial support for major improvements to the A550 and for the adoption of the blue route. That, after considering carefully the question of alternatives via the M53 and M56, the best option was to proceed with the modified blue route.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors were considered when the decision was taken to develop the A550.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The objectives underlying all trunk road schemes are:

To assist economic growth by reducing transport costs
To improve the environment by removing through traffic from unsuitable roads in towns and villages, and
To enhance road safety.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration was given to traffic-calming measures as a solution to current problems on the A550; and if he will make a statement on the investigation and its conclusions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The A550 forms an integral part of the trunk road system which we wish to maintain and develop. Traffic calming is not relevant in these circumstances.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will quantify annual accidents (a) on the A550 Ledsham bridge section prior to the improvements made in the 1980s and (b) for the same route since the improvements were completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There were nine accidents in four years prior to the improvements completed in early 1989. There have been three accidents in four years since then.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the terms of reference for improving the A550 will include an examination of the justification of the principle of the entire scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Each stage of the improvement stands alone as a separate scheme, the need and justification for which is likely to be tested at public inquiry.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the original proposals for the A550 improvement were received; and whether they formed a co-ordinated scheme with proposals for the Dee barrage.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The 1987 White Paper "Policy for Roads" introduced a scheme to improve the A550 between Woodbank and Ledsham. In 1989, the complementary scheme for the improvement between Ledsham and the M53 was added. Account was taken of all planned road schemes in the area.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the principle of the current scheme for major improvements to the A550 was last evaluated; and if he will make a statement detailing the alternative schemes with which it was compared at that time.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The justification for a scheme is continually assessed as design progresses. Alternative schemes assessed were an on-line improvement and an off-line route to the east of Two Mills.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the possible rail alternatives to the current proposals for improvements to the A550 were last evaluated.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Recent and planned improvements to the rail network in the area are being taken into account in the scheme assessment. They are unlikely to have a major impact on the need for the improvements to the A550.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the criteria used to reach the decision for the proposed Ledsham to Deeside Park and M53 to Ledsham phases of the A550 improvements.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The A550 is a key element in the trunk road network for journeys between the Merseyside conurbation and north Wales. The present narrow single carriageway has a poor vertical alignment in places and is substandard for the amount of traffic using it. Poor visibility at junctions and accesses makes conditions hazardous for all road users and accidents are above the national average. Traffic is subject to congestion and queuing at peak hours and summer weekends. The degree and frequency of the congestion will increase with forecast higher flows.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will quantify traffic annually using (a) the A550 prior to the M53/A55 link around Chester into north Wales and (b) the same route since completion of the M53/A55 link.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following is the information:

(a) Prior to completion of M53/A55 link—
Hooton—12,450 vehicles per day
Deeside Park—46,500 vehicles per day
(b) Since completion of M53/A55 link—
Hooton—12,450 vehicles per day
Deeside Park—45,500 vehicles per day

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement detailing the forecast traffic growth on the A550; and what are the criteria on which this forecast is based.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Traffic flow forecasts for 2011 are:

	Vehicles per day
Hooton
Low growth	30,500
High growth	37,500
Deeside Park
Low growth	71,700
High growth	87,500

The Department used its standard methodologies to produce growth factors for private vehicles which reflect local circumstances. For commercial vehicles growth was assumed to be in line with national road traffic forecasts.

The growth factors were then applied to current traffic flows to produce forecasts for the year 2011 which were assigned to the road network containing the Department's proposals.

Bypass Definition

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what definition of a highway bypass is used by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is no statutory definition of a bypass. Trunk road bypass schemes remove through traffic from towns and villages on all-purpose trunk roads. Other schemes in the national road programme may have a similar effect.

Lorry Drivers

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for dealing with abuse of the requirements on lorry drivers' hours and rest periods, and the use of tachographs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Breaches of the rules for drivers' hours, rest periods and the proper fitting and use of tachographs have serious implications for road safety. We take a grave view of those who seek to circumvent these rules and in the interests of safety the vehicle inspectorate is to increase the enforcement resources it devotes to this work by nearly 70 per cent. from June this year. This will be organised through special task forces to target specific areas of concern. We aim to achieve this result within the present resources of the vehicle inspectorate both through a number of efficiency gains and by switching some effort from weight enforcement.

Motorways

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish a Green Paper on motorway charging.

Mr. MacGregor: Together with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales, I intend to publish tomorrow a Green Paper on the basis of charging for motorways in Great Britain entitled "Paying for Better Motorways: Issues for Discussion". Copies will be available in the Vote Office from 11 am in the usual way.

The Green Paper will be very much a consultation document to stimulate informed and vigorous debate. The Government have taken no decision to introduce direct charging.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House Committees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will make a statement outlining the relationship between the Commission and the domestic House Committees, indicating how their reports are considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: Under the House of Commons (Administration) Act 1978, the Commission is responsible for the appointment of staff of the House and for laying before the House the Estimates for House of Commons: Administration and House of Commons: Works Services. The work of the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities is described in its annual reports presented to the House, most recently on 16 July 1992 (HC 155).

The Finance and Services Committee has responsibility for detailed consideration of financial matters, including questions of priority for expenditure. It prepares draft estimates with the assistance of the board of management for submission to the Commission. The main role of the domestic committees, apart from their consumer role in advising on the delivery of services by House Departments, is to make policy recommendations to the Speaker and the Commission as appropriate. The recommendations are then considered as necessary by the Finance and Services Committee in advance of final decisions being taken by the Commission.

The Commission operates a long-standing policy of requiring the introduction of a major new service to be approved by the House before provision is made for it in the estimates. The occasion for such a debate would normally be the consideration of a report from the relevant domestic committee.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Preferential Assistance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish figures showing Government expenditure on regional preferential assistance to industry for each standard United Kingdom region (a) at current prices and (b) at 1989-90 prices for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of regional preferential assistance at current prices for 1991-92 and 1992-93 can be found in my answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 May, Official Report, columns 121-22.

A regional breakdown of regional preferential assistance at 1989-90 prices, covering the period 1991-92 and 1992-93, is as follows:

£ million

Region	1991-92	1992-93
Northern[1]	55·3	40·5
Yorkshire and Humberside	15·8	11·5
East Midlands	2·3	1·0
South West	7·2	6·9
West Midlands	7·5	9·1
North West[2]	42·9	30·9
England	131·0	99·8
Wales	133·5	[3]118·2
Scotland	111·8	[3]86·7
Great Britain	376·3	[3]304·8
Northern Ireland	121·8	[3]91·0
United Kingdom	498·1	[3]395·8

All figures are gross and include payments to Nationalised Industries.

[1] Includes expenditure in Cumbria.

[2] Excludes expenditure in Cumbria.

[3] Provisional.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants; expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh development agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Highlands and Islands development board.

Northern Ireland has a different range of financial incentives available and the items included are Industrial Development Board grants and loans, expenditure on land and factories, share capital standard capital grants and local enterprise development unit grants and loans.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the numbers and value of offers of (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional enterprise grants within each standard United Kingdom region in 1991-92 and 1992-93; what is the forecast outturn for 1993-94; and if he will list (i) the number of applications, (ii) the associated project costs and (iii) the amount of grant paid.

Mr. Sainsbury: The regional selective assistance (RSA) and regional enterprise grants (REG) schemes are applicable only in Great Britain.

For 1991-92 all the information requested about RSA and REG can be found in the annual report of the Industrial Development Act 1982 at appendices 7 and 5 respectively. Copies are available in the Library of the House. Apart from the amount of grant paid, information for 1992-93 is presently being prepared and will be published in the annual report in September 1993.

The amount of grant paid in each standard region in 1992-93 was:

£ million

	1992-93
	RSA	REG
Northern	28·1	1·5
North West	18·2	1·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	8·4	1·8
South West	5·1	0·8
East Midlands	0·6	0·3
West Midlands	10·7	0·1
England	71·1	5·8
Scotland	59·2	2·8
Wales	[1]58·8	[1]1·1
Great Britain	[1]189·1	[1]9·7

[1] Provisional.

The latest forecast outturns for RSA and REG for 1993-94 are contained in the 1993-94 Supply estimates.

Sellafield

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current timing of the decision in respect of the commissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: Before commissioning its thermal oxide reprocessing plant, British Nuclear Fuels plc will need such consents and authorisations as may be required by law. The company's application for revised discharge authorisations for the Sellafield site is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the revised timetable for the long-term safety review of nuclear reactors by the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Eggar: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has so far published reports of its findings on six power stations. It intends to publish a report on the generic issues arising out of the long-term safety reviews (LTSRs) of Magnox stations later this year. Important modifications to plant at all the Magnox stations have been or are being implemented. The NII has requested the licensees to give priority to these generic safety concerns so that action is taken without waiting for completion of individual station's LTSRs. Brief reports on the remaining five stations should then be available before the end of 1994.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he received the 1991-92 report of his advisory committee on the safety of nuclear installations; and what action he plans to take in response to its recommendations;

(2) when he received a copy of the third report of the advisory committee on the safety of nuclear installations study group on human factors.

Mr. Eggar: I received copies of the biennial report of the Health and Safety Commission's Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations (ACSNI), and of a report from its study group on human factors, on Monday 17 May, the day of their publication. The biennial report contains no recommendations as such, but I have noted the areas of work which ACSNI has undertaken in 1991-1992 and have also been informed about the committee's forward programme for 1993.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to seek an international convention to harmonise the safety standards of nuclear reactors.

Mr. Eggar: The Government welcome the discussions taking place at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna on a proposed international nuclear safety convention, and hopes these can be concluded as soon as possible. The convention should be based on general principles of nuclear safety and should be aimed at improving the safety of civil nuclear power reactors world wide.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the resources of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the implementation of programmes for improving safety in the nuclear industries of the countries of central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Eggar: Major funding for projects to improve nuclear safety in the countries of central and eastern Europe is being provided through bilateral assistance programmes co-ordinated by G24, and through the multilateral fund, established as an initiative of the G7 July 1992 Munich summit. The Government are playing a full part in these programmes and recently made a contribution of £8·25 million to the fund. The Government consider that the resources currently available to the International Atomic Energy Agency are broadly consistent with the distinctive contribution the agency is able to make in the area, both through its own specific programmes and the quality of its technical advice to others.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many shipments of safeguarded plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan have taken place to date.

Mr. Eggar: For the period from May 1979, shipments of plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan were made in financial years 1979-80, 1980-81 and 1981-82. The shipments were made under safeguards for use in civil nuclear power research and development. The specific details are a matter for the operator concerned and its customers.

Abu Dhabi

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what matters in regard to the prospects for a carbon tax were raised by the Minister for Energy during his recent visit to Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Eggar: During my recent visit to the Gulf, considerable concern was expressed in Abu Dhabi and elsewhere about the European Commission's proposals for a carbon/energy tax. I explained that the United Kingdom was not convinced that a Community-wide tax along the lines proposed by the Commission was either a necessary or appropriate response to the problem of global warming. I also took the opportunity to explain the outcome of the joint session of the Energy and Environment Councils on 23 April outlined in my reply to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham), Official Report, columns 109-10, on 5 May 1993.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent British Coal may take into account commercial concerns over potential competitors in assessing disposal and future sale of pits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Offering to the private sector pits which British Coal does not wish to keep in production is a matter for British Coal. As the White Paper explains, the Government believe that it is right that where a private sector operator is prepared to take on a pit for the long term that operator should have the opportunity to succeed or fail in the market. In considering bids, British Coal will, of course, have to have due regard to its statutory duties.

Newly licensed mines will have to find new outlets for their production and will not have access to British Coal's contracts with the electricity supply industry.

Croatia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice his Department gives to British businesses considering investment in the Republic of Croatia.

Mr. Needham: Because of Croatia's serious economic and political difficulties, my Department urges a cautious approach on British companies considering investing there.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods each year since 1972, distinguishing between imports from (a) the EEC and (b) the rest of the world.

Mr. Needham: Information on import penetration from 1970 to 1979 was published in the June 1980 edition of "Economic Trends". Subsequent data up to the year ended June 1989 were published in "Business Monitor MQ12"; annual summaries are published in table 12.2 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics". These publications are available in the Library of the House. The figures do not separate the EC from the rest of the world.

Tariffs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the average incidence of tariffs on imports and exports of manufactures in (a) 1972 and (b) 1992 in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the original EEC Six, and indicating the average loss of tariff preference between the United Kingdom and (x) Denmark, (y) the Irish Republic and (z) Commonwealth countries since 1972.

Mr. Needham: No. The provision of this detailed information would incur disproportionate costs in terms of resources and time.

Coal Review

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to visit representatives of (a) employers and (b) employees of those coal mines in Wales which were included in the British Coal review to discuss the future of their pits.

Mr. Eggar: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any plans to do so at present.

Gas Interconnector

Mr. Stephen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made by the group of companies studying the feasibility of building a gas interconnector between the United Kingdom and the continent.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the group will shortly be inviting potential users to participate in an interconnector linking the United Kingdom and Belgian gas grids. I welcome this initiative by the industry. It is an important step towards realising the gas trade opportunities this link will provide. It will be for the Government to negotiate with the Belgian Government the necessary treaty for a pipeline crossing our continental shelf boundary, and I am writing to the chairman of the group to assure him of our readiness to do so.

Companies House

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set Companies House executive agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Heseltine: I have set Companies House executive agency the following targets for 1993-94:

- to make all statutory documents available for public inspection within five working days of receipt;
- to satisfy all requests for searches within two hours;
- to achieve a compliance rate of 86 per cent. by end June 1993, increasing to 90 per cent. by end June 1994 for companies filing accounts and annual returns; and
- to reduce real unit costs by an average of 2 per cent. a year.

Companies House is also required to achieve a 6 per cent. average annual rate of return based on its operating surplus expressed as a percentage of average net assets employed at current values.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the agency the target of replying within 10 working days to letters from MPs delegated to him for reply.

Telecommunications Council

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council held on 10 May.

Mr. Leigh: The main item of business was the proposal for a Council decision on an action plan for the introduction of advanced television services in Europe. Some progress was made towards achieving an agreement, but several key points on the content of the action plan, including the overall amount of any Community expenditure have yet to be agreed. Negotiations will continue at a further Council meeting, scheduled for 16 June.

A common position was agreed in principle on the directive applying open network provision to voice telephony. Council conclusions on the Commission's communication on the European telecommunications equipment industry were adopted without discussion. These invite the Commission to strengthen Community action already under way in four areas: establishment of an internal market, support for research and development, development of the terminal equipment market, and improving competitive conditions in the world market. There was also a short debate on a recent Commission communication on the review of the telecommunications services market, which proposed full liberalisation of telecom services by 1998. On the postal Green Paper the Commission gave a brief oral report on the results of the consultation period. There will be more substantive discussions on both these points at the Telecommunications Council on 16 June.

UKAEA

Mr. Dunn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make a statement on the chairmanship of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Heseltine: The current chairman's appointment expires on 30 June 1993. I have appointed Sir Anthony Cleaver to succeed him, initially for three years, from 1 July 1993.

Advertisements (Germany)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many advertisements his Department has placed in German newspapers and periodicals; into which ones they were placed; what the cost has been; what was the purpose of the advertisements; what the response has been; and if he will place copies of these advertisements in the Library.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 May 1993]: During the 1992-93 financial year a total of 74 advertisements costing some £160,000 were placed in Handelsblatt, Wirtschaftswoche and TopBusiness, together with chamber of commerce magazines in Freiburg, Stuttgart, Mannheim, Karlsruhe and Reutlingen. The advertising campaign was aimed at stimulating the interest of German companies in the advantages the United Kingdom offers as a profitable investment location. So far, some 40 companies have responded. Copies of the advertisement have been placed in the Library.

Gas Prices

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the standing charges per quarter and the unit charge in pence/kWh for gas prices for each year since 1991-92; what is each figure as a percentage increase or decrease on the previous year's figure; what were the changes in the retail prices index over the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

Domestic Gas: Standard Credit Tariff

	Standing charge Pence per day	Unit cost Pence per kWh
1 April 1991	10·3	1·566
1 April 1992	10·3	1·566
1 July 1992	10·3	1·507
1 October 1992	10·1	1·477
1 April 1993	10·1	1·477

Percentage changes

	Gas
	Standing charge	Unit cost	RPI (all items)
April 1991 to April 1992	nil	nil	+4·3
April 1992 to April 1993	−1·9	−5·7	+1·3

Retail Prices Index (all items)
13 January 1987 = 100

	RPI
April 1991	133·1
April 1992	138·8
April 1993	140·6

Over the two-year period 1990-92 in real terms standing charges have decreased by 8·2 per cent. and unit cost by 4·1 per cent.

EDUCATION

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received on the subject of discretionary grants over the past 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a considerable number of representations on this subject from members of the public, interested groups and hon. Members.

Testing

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had from, and what meetings he has had with, parent-teacher associations on the subject of testing in schools; and what consideration he is giving to their views.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters from parent-teacher associations in recent months. He last met the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations (NCPTA) on 26 April. He has also met a delegation from Parents' Initiative, and gave a speech at the annual conference of the Campaign for Real Education on 17 April.

All these occasions allowed my right hon. Friend to speak to parents, and to seek their views on the subject of testing. We recognise that parents have an essential role to play in the education process: we want actively to engage them in it.

My right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, to conduct a wide-ranging review of the manageability of the national curriculum and the associated testing and assessment framework. Parent-teacher associations should make their views known to him.

Student Loans

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of students have taken up a student loan within the first year of study, in each year since the initiation of the student loan scheme.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Multiple Disabilities

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce legislation to extend the statutory entitlement to education for people with multiple disabilities to at least the age of 25 years; and if he will meet the campaign for people with multiple disabilities to discuss the need for statutory change.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Act 1992 requires the Further Education Funding Council and local education authorities to ensure that adequate further education provision is available for adults without age limit, including those with multiple disabilities. These are substantial statutory duties; the Government have no plans to extend them.

Teacher Education

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what advice he has received from the Office for Standards in Education on the experience of partnership between higher education institutions and schools in the education and training of teachers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what advice he has received from the Office for Standards in Education arising from its surveys of teachers education courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: Ofsted is engaged in a four year cycle of inspections of higher education institutions offering initial teacher training and it or the institutions publish these reports. From time to time, Ofsted also publish reports on surveys conducted on various aspects of initial or in-service training for teachers.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how his plans for the future of teacher education differ from the statement in circular 9/92 concerning the shared responsibility of higher education institutions and schools for planning and management of courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: I welcome the move towards greater partnership between higher education institutions and schools which circular 9/92 has brought about, and look forward to similar developments in primary teacher training. I am also pleased that we are now able to offer some schools the chance to design and run their own courses, allowing them to decide on an appropriate role for higher education institutions. I shall be announcing the names of the first schools chosen to run such courses shortly.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish a circular about the future of teacher education for primary school teachers; what advice he has received from the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education on this matter this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: Proposals for the reform of primary initial teacher training will be announced soon and will take account of advice received from the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how he intends to alter the present arrangements for teacher education; on what basis qualifications will be awarded to students; who will validate such qualifications; and if he will make it his policy that those qualifications will be no lower in quality and status than existing teacher qualifications.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have already introduced new requirements for secondary teacher training. My right hon. Friend recently announced a pioneer scheme for school-led training courses. We will shortly be issuing for consultation proposals for the reform of primary teacher training. Arrangements for validation are for the institutions concerned; my right hon. Friend will continue to use his powers to approve courses leading to qualified teacher status so as to improve the quality and standing of the teaching profession.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the current arrangements for teacher education; which types of qualification are available to those who wish to practise as teachers; who validates such qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Current arrangements for initial teacher training, and other ways of achieving qualified teacher status, are summarised in the publication "Routes into Teaching" issued by the Teaching as a Career unit. Copies are available from the Library.

Head Teachers and Deputies

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the earnings of head teachers and deputy head teachers in each group from one to six in real terms at January 1993 prices for each year since 1990-91; and if he will provide estimates for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The current pay spine for heads and deputies was introduced on 1 January 1991. Table A shows the values of the points on the spine at that date and on subsequent dates when they have been increased, converted to January 1993 prices by use of the retail prices index. The spine was extended by two points in April 1991.

Table B shows the points ranges applying to the salaries of heads and deputies in the six school groups. The School Teachers' Review Body has not yet been asked to report on teachers' pay in 1994-95.

Key Stage Tests

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements have been made to produce the large print version of the key stage tests.

Mr. Forth: Brailled, enlarged and modified print versions of test papers for 14-year-olds are available for pupils with a statement of special needs for visual impairment. It is for teachers to decide which type of question paper is most suitable for their pupils. The School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) asked schools to place orders for such papers by January 1993. Pupil packs are made up individually according to schools' orders.

Large print versions of the tests for seven-year-olds have not been prepared. Given the way the tests are administered, teachers are able to explain the nature of the tasks to pupils with visual impairment. However, schools may enlarge pupil work sheets in preparing the tests for pupils with special needs.

SEAC has also advised schools of a telephone helpline which has been established at the Royal National Institute for the Blind to deal with inquiries and any problems arising over the delivery of test papers.

Gang Rape Poem

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the inclusion of a poem on gang rape used in the London Examination Board GCSE syllabus.

Mr. Forth: This poem was not prescribed for study as part of any syllabus published by the University of London Examinations and Assessment Council. I understand that it was selected by one school as one of the poems to be studied and written about under a syllabus which left the choice to the school. The selection by schools of material for study is a matter for the school concerned, but having read the poem I believe that it was unsuitable and regrettable.

Testing

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated cost of the national key stage testing for all school children in England and Wales in each subject and at each key stage for this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The estimated costs of producing and distributing the statutory tests for 1993 in English, mathematics, science and Welsh at key stage 1—seven-year-olds—is £1,230,000. The estimated cost of the non-mandatory tests at this key stage is £1,470,000.

The cost of the statutory tests in English, mathematics, science, technology and Welsh at key stage 3—14-year-olds—is £4,090,000. This includes support materials.

At key stage 2 there are no statutory assessments this year.

Teachers (Earnings)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing the earnings of qualified teachers on each scale point from one to 10 in real terms at January 1993 prices for each year since 1990-91; and if he will provide estimates for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The following table shows the values of the points on the standard scale for qualified teachers other than heads and deputies at 1 April 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993. These have been converted to January 1993 prices by use of the retail prices index. Teachers paid on the standard scale may also be paid incentive allowances at one of five rates—currently £1,302, £2,109, £4,218, £5,625, and £7,734—and other discretionary payments. The salaries listed exclude London weighting. Teachers in service on 1 May 1993 will receive a lump sum of £90. The standard scale will cease to exist in September 1993 when a new pay spine for classroom teachers will be introduced.

SCOTLAND

Inspectorate of Constabulary

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a statement on the role of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The citizens charter highlighted the importance of the role of the main public service inspectorates in checking that the service providers meet the needs of the public which they serve, and the "Justice Charter for Scotland" which I published in November 1991 provided undertakings as to the manner in which Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary for Scotland would perform this role. Further information about the inspectorate is provided in a leaflet under the title "The Role of HM Inspectorate of Constabulary, Scotland" which I have published today.

The leaflet incorporates a statement of principles for the inspectorate which focuses on the key principles of independence, openness, lay involvement and objectivity. It also explains the role and organisation of the inspectorate, and describes the process of annual inspection of police forces in Scotland. Particular attention is drawn to the arrangements which are made by the inspectorate to obtain the view of members of the public and to ensure that the public have access to the reports of their inspections. The leaflet will be available in police stations and in public libraries throughout Scotland.

I have placed copies of the leaflet in the Library.

General Practitioners

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what limitations are imposed on the reimbursement of general practitioners performing minor surgery; on what grounds these limitations are imposed; when he plans to review the arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 May 1993]: Under the statement of fees and allowances for general medical practitioners in Scotland which are determined by the Secretary of State after consultation with representatives of the medical profession, a general medical practitioner on the local health board's minor surgery list is entitled to a fee for undertaking a minor surgery session—comprising five procedures. Payment is limited to a maximum of three sessions per quarter.

There are no plans to review these arrangements.

Kerr Little

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of public money given to the meat processing and butchering company, Kerr Little, not in receivership, in the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1993]: Kerr Little was awarded an EC grant in 1992 worth £173,574 and had earlier been made an offer of regional selective assistance worth £145,000 by Scottish Office Industry Department. The Scottish Office is in contact with the receiver in the interest of safeguarding public money already paid to the company, which totals £186,142.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) people and (b) males aged 16 years or over were recorded by the 1991 census in Scotland as economically inactive; and what percentage these figures represent of the population in each case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1993]: In the 1991 census of population there were 1,581,059 persons in Scotland who were aged 16 and over and economically inactive. This figure is 39·6 per cent. of all persons aged 16 and over. The corresponding figures for males are 510,718 and 27·2.

Farmers and Fishermen

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many officials are employed by his Department to administer, inspect, regulate and advise the farming and fishing industries either directly, in agencies or on special contracts (a) in 1992 and (b) at the latest available date; how many (i) farmers and (ii) fishermen there are in Scotland, full or part time; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The total numbers of staff employed by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department, the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency at 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993 are shown in the following table, together with the most recent figures available on the numbers of farmers and fishermen in Scotland.

Staff numbers (full-time equivalent[1])

	1 April 1992 Number	Number	1 April 1993 Number
SOAFD	1,033·5		1,071·5

[2] Includes partners and directors as at 1992 June agricultural census.
[3] SOAFD figures as at December 1992.

Nurse Regrading

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of outstanding regrading appeals by nurses on each of the health board areas.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 May 1993]: I understand that virtually no nurse clinical grading appeals submitted under section 32 of the General Whitley Council conditions of service are oustanding at health board level. On 1 May 1993, 478 appeals to the Scottish Appeals Committee were outstanding. On the same date 482 appeals at national level remitted by the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council to the Scottish Appeal Team secretariat were outstanding; the breakdown of these by health board is given in the table.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total numbers of sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) quadruplets, (iv) quintuplets and (v) sextuplets born in Scotland in each year since 1980 and the total number of maternities in Scotland in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (a) in-vitro fertilisation, (b) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (c) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The information is as follows:

	Type of birth					Total maternities

[1] Provisional.

Information on the number of multiple births in Scotland attributed to assisted reproduction is not available. Some information on these matters is published in the first annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, and in earlier annual reports of the interim licensing authority, copies of which are available in the Library.

Court Cases

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases heard by (a) district courts, (b) sheriff courts and (c) the High Court resulted in (i) convictions, (ii) a verdict of not proven and (iii) dismissals, for the last seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The available information is given in the table:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hostel Accommodation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average weekly cost to the DHSS in Northern Ireland for providing a place for a single person in hostel accommodation.

Mr. Hanley: The average weekly accommodation cost met by DHSS through the housing benefit scheme for a single resident in a hostel is £98.72.

Terrorism

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been killed or injured as a result of fire and explosion during terrorist incidents in the past three years.

Mr. Mates: The available information is set out in the table. Information on persons injured in fires is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are receiving benefits in respect of myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. However, I have been advised that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the total numbers of sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) quadruplets, (iv) quintuplets and (v) sextuplets born in Northern Ireland in each year since 1980 and the total number of maternities in Northern Ireland in each year; and how many multiple births of each type in each year were conceived as a result of (a) in-vitro fertilisation, (b) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (c) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table:

GIFT was available in Northern Ireland in only 1986 and 1987.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 554, what was the nature of the Minister responsible for health and agriculture's visit to the constituency of Upper Bann on 24 February; and with regard to that visit and his visits of 17 February and 20 April, when and how he endeavoured to inform the hon. Member for that constituency.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 May 1993]: My noble friend the Lord Arran visited Avondale Foods (Craigavon) Ltd., Lurgan and hosted a private dinner on 24 February 1993.

Telephone calls were made to the hon. Member's constituency office, giving notification of all the visits, at least the day before the visit.

PRIME MINISTER

Manchester Airport

Q6. Mr. Mans: To ask the Prime Minister when he next intends to visit Manchester airport.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has at present no plans to do so.

Environmental Appraisal

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Departments have carried out an environmental appraisal of their policy-making and administrative procedures.

The Prime Minister: All Departments must ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in developing their policies and programmes. Papers to Cabinet and ministerial committees should, where appropriate, cover any significant costs or benefits to the environment. We are firmly committed to the principle that "green issues" must be built into decision taking throughout Government.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 May.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 May.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending the unveiling of a memorial statue to Field Marshal the Viscount Alanbrooke by Her Majesty the Queen as is, I understand, the Leader of the official Opposition.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that smoke alarms are fitted in all new publicly owned dwellings and buildings.

The Prime Minister: It has been policy to provide smoke alarms in all new dwellings since 1 June 1992.

Smoke alarms in other buildings—whether public or privately owned—are normally required under licensing or certification arrangements where appropriate.

Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a table showing in index form and as a percentage the growth in output between 1963 and 1973, 1973 and 1979 and 1979 to date of each of the mechanical engineering, textiles, clothing, footwear, cars, commercial vehicles, leather, man-made fibres, metals, metal goods not elsewhere specified and shipbuilding industries, together with (i) the change in their weight as a percentage of manufacturing output and the weight of manufacturing in gross domestic product, (ii) figures of import penetration by the EEC and the rest of the world, including an estimate from the year ended June 1989 and (iii) the change in their share of exports of the main manufacturing countries.

Mr. Heseltine: I have been asked to reply.

Complete information is not available. Output indices for the industries listed below are available from the central shared database (CSDB) operated by the Central Statistical Office, which can be accessed from the Library of the House.

	Indices
Mechanical engineering (class 32)	DVJA
Textiles (class 43)	DVJI
Clothing, leather and footwear (published group 44/45)	DVJJ
Motor vehicles (published group 35)	DVJC
Man-made fibres (class 26)	DVIX
Metals (published group 21/22)	DVIT
Metal goods NES (class 31)	DVIZ
Other transport (class 36)	DVJD

The weights within manufacturing for each of the above groups and manufacturing within gross domestic product in the index base years are as follows:

	1963	1975	1980	1985
32	15·5	16·9	19·6	17·9
43	7·2	5·3	4·4	4·5
44/45	4·9	5·3	5·1	5·3
35	7·3	7·3	7·8	8·0
26	1·2	0·8	0·4	0·5
21/22	8·3	6·6	4·7	5·5
31	7·5	7·8	8·3	7·8
36	6·5	5·6	6·9	7·7
Manufacturing	35·3	30·0	26·5	23·8

Information on import penetration from 1970 to 1979 was published in the June 1980 edition of "Economic Trends". Subsequent data up to the year ended June 1989 were published in "Business Monitor MQ12"; annual summaries are published in table 12·2 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics". These publications are available in the Library of the House. The figures do not separate the EC from the rest of the world.

Export statistics for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries are published in OECD series C—"Foreign Trade by Commodities", which is available in the Library of the House. To extract these on a comparable basis for the sectors required would involve disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount spent by her Department in each of the last six years in relation to (a) coronary heart disease and (b) strokes.

Mr. Sackville: Total expenditure on coronary heart disease (CHD) and stroke is impossible to calculate with any precision. The "Health of the Nation" White Paper contains estimates that CHD accounts for 2·5 per cent. of total national health service expenditure and stroke for 6 per cent. of total expenditure, but figures are not routinely collected. Expenditure nationally on prevention of CHD and stroke, including expenditure on risk factors such as smoking, alcohol and nutrition, exceeds £10 million a year, but this takes no account of unquantifiable expenditure on, for example, advice given to patients by health professionals.

NHS Staff

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent employees there were in each of the last five years at (a) the Department of Health, (b) the NHS management executive and (c) each regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Department of Health and NHS management executive 1989-93
Whole-time equivalents as at 1 April

	Department of Health	NHS management executive[1]
1989	8,799	666
1990	5,388	797
1991	4,651	677
1992	4,803	776
1993	4,846	931

[1] Figures also included in overall Department of Health numbers.

The Department has reduced in size over the last five years largely through functions not core to its business being transferred to the national health service, non-departmental public bodies, or other agencies. Some 3,200 staff in the special hospitals transferred to the Special Hospital Service Authority in 1989.

Fluctuations in the size of the national health service management executive over time are a result of adjustments in responsibilities between the NHSME and the rest of the Department.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 26 March, Official Report, columns 748-50, for information on regional health authority employees.

Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and main appointments of each of the members of each of the selected list catetgory sub-committees which have been advising the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs; and if she will make public the details of the advice which each of the selected list category asuo-committees advising the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs have offered to the committee.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sub-committee members are drawn from the membership of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs whose names and main appointments have been announced. The main committee and its sub-committees are independent and we do not intend to publish their advice.

Drugs (Calendar Packs)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of how much money is lost to the NHS through doctors prescribing extra calendar packs of drugs, to make up for shortfalls because calendar packs are issued in 28 day units;

(2) what considerations underline the policy of supplying calendar packs of drugs produced for the NHS in 28 day units rather than 30 day units.

Dr. Mawhinney: Pharmaceutical companies are responsible for determining what size calendar packs of drugs they produce. These are usually in 28 or 30 day units. General practitioners prescribe the amount needed by their patients by indicating, for example, the number of days, weeks or months of treatment or the number of calendar packs they wish to be supplied. There is no information to suggest that money is lost to the national health service because doctors find it necessary to prescribe extra quantities of drugs which are produced in calendar packs of 28 day units.

German Measles

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of cases of German measles in (a) each complete year since 1980 and (b) in 1993 to date.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Notifications of Rubella[1] (German measles) 1989-93

	Number
1989	24,570
1990	11,491
1991	7,174
1992	6,212
1993	[2]4,977

[1] Rubella (German measles) only became a notifiable disease in October 1988 and therefore the first complete year for which there are statistics is 1989.
[2] Provisional figure for 1993, up to and including 7 May.

Wellhouse Trust

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) laboratory technicians employed by the Wellhouse trust in each year since 1980; and what has been the total number of beds in the hospital of the trust in each such year.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Tony Orton, the chairman of the Wellhouse Trust, for details.

Sight Impairment

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the North West regional health authority are registered blind; and what is the total number of people with severe sight impairment.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally.

Research and Development

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will set up a pilot multidisciplinary based centre for research and development; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have decided to establish a university based research and development centre in the field of primary health care. The increasing importance of this sector means that it is now opportune to develop a capacity to carry out long-term high quality research and development. The delivery of primary care is vital both to the health and well-being of the population and to the effective and efficient delivery of health care services and, increasingly, innovative forms of service delivery and new initiatives in care and treatment are emerging within this sector. Primary care leads the demand for a range of services and, at the present time, is especially significant in inner cities in general and in London in particular. In the coming years, primary care will continue to be a source of exciting developments for the health service.

The establishment of a dedicated long-term research centre will ensure that these developments are linked to research-based information, while taking into account likely changes in organisation and delivery of care. Both primary care and the programme of research will be defined broadly, to take into account not only the general medical service and general practice but also the flow of patients between primary and secondary care and the nature of the interface between the sectors.

The centre will be established by selective competitive tender from universities in England and Wales. This process will be led by Professor Michael Peckham, the director of research and development. A key consideration in selecting the successful bid will be the extent to which universities show that they can harnesss a significant contribution to this research field from other funders, including the private sector. Advertisements, and letters to universities inviting expressions of interest in tendering for the centre, will be published shortly.

Multiple Disabilities

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to place a duty on social services departments to draw up a specific policy for meeting the needs of young people and adults with multiple disabilities, under the responsibility of a named officer, and to include this within community care plans and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are already required to prepare plans for the provision of community care services in their area. We expect these plans to set out how the authority intends to meet the needs of the whole of its population, including disabled people. Plans must be published and available to the public.

Diethylstilboestrol

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what abnormalities, other than vaginal cancer, have been identified amongst daughters of women who were prescribed the drug diethylstilboestrol; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Daughters of women given diethylstilboestrol (DES) in pregnancy may have a small increased risk of developing minor benign lesions of the cervix, and of complications of pregnancy such as premature labour. Congenital abnormalities of the vagina and uteris, infertility and psychological problems have also been identified as possible complications of DES exposure.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incidence of testicular cancer has been discovered among sons whose mothers were prescribed the drug diethylstilboestrol; and if she will make a statement

Dr. Mawhinney: Accurate information is not available. An association with testicular cancer has been claimed but not conclusively proven. Recent research on this issue is currently being evaluated by the Department.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what attempts have been made by her Department to track down those women, together with their sons and daughters, who were prescribed the drug diethylstilboestrol.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Ms Nicholson) on 5 June 1990 at columns 589-90.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what continuing research into the long-term effects of the drug diethylstilboestrol is being carried out in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not aware of any such research.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women she estimates to have been prescribed the drug diethylstilboestrol in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: It has been estimated that around 7,500 women were prescribed diethylstilboestrol (DES) during pregnancy in the United Kingdom. A small number of post-menopausal women have received oral DES for the treatment of breast cancer, and in the form of a vaginal pessary for the treatment of post-menopausal vaginitis.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when and for what reason the decision was taken for the drug diethylstilboestrol no longer to be made available for general prescription in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: Diethylstilboestrol (DES) may still be prescribed in the United Kingdom for certain restricted indications. DES is currently licensed for use in the management of prostatic cancer and breast cancer in post-menopausal women. A vaginal pessary containing DES is also licensed for use in the treatment of post-menopausal vaginitis due to oestrogen deficiency. DES is contra-indicated in pregnancy and pre-menopausal women.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence of vaginal cancers have emerged among those women who were prescribed diethylstilboestrol.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no evidence to suggest that women prescribed diethylstilboestrol (DES) are more likely to develop vaginal cancers. An increased risk of clear-cell adenocarcinoma of the vagina or cervix applies to the daughters of women prescribed DES during pregnancy.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what brand names the drug diethylstilboestrol was marketed and made available in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: Diethylstilboestrol has been marketed under the following brand names: Stilboestrol, Stilboestrol B.P., Tampovagan stilboestrol and lactic acid pessary, Honvan, Menopax, Sedestran, Merven and Pabestrol.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of research carried out in other countries about the long-term effects of the drug diethylstilboestrol on those women for whom it was prescribed and on their sons and daughters.

Dr. Mawhinney: The United Kingdom Licensing Authority and its advisory committees carefully monitor the safety of all licensed medicines, including diethylistilboestrol (DES). Information relating to the safety of DES is monitored and assessed as and when it becomes available.

The Licensing Authority liaises with other EC member states on this issue.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has received about planned or actual litigation against the manufacturers and suppliers of the drug diethylstilboestrol (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Prescriptions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many items of prescription are dispensed each day (a) to those exempt from charges and (b) to those paying for prescriptions; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1992, an average of 1·06 million prescribed items were dispensed each day by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, of which about 858,000 went to patients exempt from charges or entitled to charge remission and some 202,000 went to patients who paid charges or held prescription prepayment certificates.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date she received the research report from Durham university, prepared for her Department, on the prevalence of drug use among young people.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has not commissioned such research.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given to NHS trusts on how to handle requests from hon. Members for information.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 27 April at column 350.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the earnings of day nursery assistants under the age of 19 years, day nursery assistants over the age of 19 years and staff nursery nurses and special school nurses group A in real terms at January 1993 prices for each year since 1990-91; and if she will provide estimates for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prescriptions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate savings to the Exchequer in a full year of ending exemptions for prescriptions for (a) pregnant women, (b) pensioners and (c) children; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No firm figures are available. Any savings which might accrue from ending universal charge exemption from the groups cited by the hon. Member would be abated by the cost of income-related charge remission under the national health service low-income scheme, exemption on medical grounds, and by the take-up of prescription prepayment certificates.

Manchester and Trafford Electorates

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state the total parliamentary electorates of, respectively, the City of Manchester and the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Sackville: There are 311,274 and 168,132 parliamentary electors on the registers, which came into use on 16 February 1993, for the City of Manchester and the borough of Trafford respectively.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Safety Audits

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the results of the most recent nuclear safety audits carried out at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards; what accreditations were given as a result of these safety audits; and what were the changes in these accreditations relative to previous nuclear safety audits carried out at the two dockyards.

Mr. Aitken: The most recent nuclear and radiation safety audits of the royal dockyards confirm the continuing improvement in safety standards and awareness, already very high, throughout the naval nuclear propulsion programme.

Nuclear Submarine Refits

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Government have spent to date in assisting the preparation by contractors at (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport dockyards of proposals for the new nuclear submarine refitting facility in respect of (i) the upgrade of existing docks and (ii) the development of new build facilities.

Mr. Aitken: Individual payments to contractors are commercially confidential and therefore cannot be publicly disclosed.

Armaments and Explosives (Shipping)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which ports are used by his Department for shipping abroad armaments and explosives.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For routine movements the Department uses the ports or Marchwood military port, Ridham, Liverpool, Felixstowe, Poole, Hull and Colchester. During the Gulf crisis, the ports of Southampton, RNAD Crombie, Cliffe Jetty (River Thames) and Newport were also used. Cliffe Jetty and Newport are routinely used for movement of United States forces equipment, the arrangements for which are made by my Department.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those significant buildings which have become or are likely to become redundant as a consequence of the "Options for Change" programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Defence Exhibition, Abu Dhabi

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representatives of the United Kingdom Government and of what rank, civil or military, attended the 1993 international defence exhibition in Abu Dhabi; and at what cost.

Mr. Aitken: Some 24 civilian and uniformed members of my Department attended some part of this important exhibition, including the Head of Defence Exports Services and myself. Officers and men from HMS Nottingham also participated. Details of the extra costs of all those attending are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Maritime Defence Exhibition, Brighton

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representatives of the United Kingdom Government and of what rank, civil or military, attended the 1993 international maritime defence exhibition and conference in Brighton; and at what cost.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. A. R. Chisholm to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 25 May 1993.

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question about the International Maritime Defence Exhibition and Conference.

The event which took place at Brighton between 31 March and 2 April was organised by a private company, Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd. and sponsored by the Defence Research Agency. It was intended for those with a close professional interest in current and future maritime operations and procurement related issues and attracted around 2,500 visitors from 47 countries.

Some 350 Ministry of Defence representatives, civil and military, attended the exhibition and conference, the majority coming from those staffs concerned with maritime operations sea systems procurement and defence sales. There was no charge for attending the exhibition but a fee of £295 was levied for attending the conference. Of the 350 MOD visitors, some 50 attended the conference although half of these were either VIP guests or speakers and consequently were not required to pay the fee. A breakdown of paying visitors by grade is set out below:

There were also about 150 fee paying delegates from industry attending the conference.

I hope you will find this helpful.

Aerospace Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 523, to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on the defence industrial base, what discussions he has held about the planned merger of the missile divisions of British Aerospace and Matra-Hachette.

Mr. Aitken: Representatives of British Aerospace have informed me and my officials about their discussions with Matra-Hachette on a proposed joint venture between the two companies' missile businesses.

Helicopter Landing Platform

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the evaluation of the tender from VSEL for the LPH included a comparison of the overhead rates for the LPH contract and those for the Trident submarine contracts.

Mr. Aitken: Both LPH bids were assessed against our normal criteria for competitive contracts.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the engines specified by VSEL in their tender for the LPH satisfy the captive shock requirements;

(2) what assurances he has received that the LPH constructed according to the successful tender will satisfy the requirements for a Panama canal certificate.

Mr. Aitken: VSEL has contracted to meet all our requirements.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his statement of 20 April, Official Report, column 165, if he has decided whether to withdraw 4 Armoured Field Ambulance from Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four armoured field ambulance will be withdrawn from UNPROFOR in Croatia on 6 June, and will be replaced by 5 Field Ambulance, which will deploy with UNPROFOR for three months.

Defence Animal Centre

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Defence Animal Centre.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Defence Animal Centre (DAC) will be launched as a defence agency on 1 June 1993. The DAC is located at Melton Mowbray in Leicestershire and employs 195 service personnel and 43 civilians. Part of the joint service dog training wing is at RAF Newton and this is also included within the boundaries of the agency, as is the subsidiary site at Syerston. The full cost budget for the DAC for 1992-93 is around £10 million.

The role of the DAC is to procure, train and issue dogs and horses, to train personnel in their handling and care, and to provide supporting veterinary services. The high professional standards of the DAC will be maintained and agency status will provide the chief executive with new opportunities to improve the efficiency and value for money of his organisation. Colonel Paul Jepson has been appointed as the agency's chief executive. The corporate strategy of the DAC will be pursued in the context of the following first year key targets:

1. Trained output
   Agreed numbers to be trained:

	Number
Dogs	380
Horses	50
Dog handlers	536
Equine managers	18

2. Success rate
   To achieve trained output within in-training wastage rates of:

	Percentage
Dogs	39
Horses	10
Dog handlers	5
Equine managers	10

3. Cost
   To achieve programmed output within budget.
4. Efficiency
   To produce agreed costs proposals, by 1 April 1994, to reduce the cost per animal/handler through improved efficiency in the management and training of animals and personnel, and by collocation and rationalisation of resources.
5. Management systems
   To install a financial accounting and management information system package to enable operation of a full cost accruals accounting system by 1 April 1994.
6. Market testing
   To evaluate the impact in value-for-money terms of market testing all agency functions which do not have a direct war role; to identify in order of priority agency functions to be market tested in a programme which will begin by 1 April 1994.
7. Customer satisfaction
   To conduct a customer satisfaction survey of quality and, by 1 April 1994, set targets for improvement.

I have placed a copy of the framework document in the Library of the House.

Manadon Engineering College

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions he has reached about the future of the Royal Naval Engineering College at Manadon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future requirement for naval engineer officer training has been reviewed in the light of reduced future numbers of engineer officers, the need to make economies in support infrastructure and the increased availability of higher education in the civilian sector. The review has concluded that the most cost effective way to meet the Navy's future needs for engineer officers is to establish a sponsorship scheme based on a civilian university. Under this scheme, which would complement the existing direct graduate recruitment, students would study for an engineering degree, relevant to naval needs, and upon successfully completing the course would be offered a commission in the Navy. This would replace the in-service engineering degree training currently provided at Manadon.

I have accepted this recommendation as the basis for consultation and a final decision will be taken in the light of representations made. A consultation document is being issued to interested parties and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. Unless alternative uses for it could be found, Manadon would close in 1995, with consequent implications for the 175 civilian staff employed there. Manadon has a long and proud tradition and has served the Navy well. But in today's circumstances other means exist of providing high-quality training for naval engineer officers and it is right that they should be utilised.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Croatia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to raise the matter of minority rights in the Republic of Croatia with the Croatian Government or its representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Minority rights in Croatia were a key element of the negotiations pursued by the Carrington conference in 1991-92 and of the principles agreed at the London conference on the former Yugoslavia in August 1992. The co-chairmen of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia and the chairmen of the working group on ethnic and national communities and minority working group are in regular close contact with the Croatian Government and have been mandated by the EC and United Nations to promote negotiations on this issue. We fully support the work of the co-chairmen and take every opportunity to impress on the Croatian Government the importance of co-operating with the co-chairmen to resolve the problems of minorities within Croatia.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the German Foreign Minister on German involvement in the transfer of arms to the Republic of Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not discussed this issue with the German Foreign Minister. We continue to believe that it is vital that all countries scrupulously observe the arms embargo imposed under United Nations Security Council resolution 713.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has received from President General Tudjman of Croatia to the message sent by EC member states on 12 May protesting at Croatian aggression and ethnic cleansing in Mostar.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: President Tudjman replied on 13 May to the President of the EC Council of Ministers, Mr. Petersen. He listed initiatives taken by the Croatian Government to try to bring the situation in central Bosnia under control, and asserted that Croatia was not responsible for the aggression of the Bosnian Croats. President Tudjman repeated these points at a meeting he held with the German Foreign Minister on 14 May. Mr. Kinkel repeated the EC demand that President Tudjman should exert his influence over the Bosnian Croats in order to stop the fighting.

Croatia (Mercenaries)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protests Her Majesty's Government have made to the Croatian representative in London regarding the recruitment of British mercenaries; what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to discourage British citizens from joining Croatian forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no evidence that the Croatian Government are involved in recruiting British citizens as mercenaries; no such protest has therefore been made. In certain circumstances it is an offence, under the Foreign Enlistment Act 1870, for a British citizen to enlist in the armed forces of a foreign state. The decision whether to investigate, or to prosecute, any alleged offender is a matter for the police and for the prosecuting authorities respectively. Our consular travel advice strongly advises British citizens not to travel to the regions of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, including parts of Croatia.

Turkey

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to pay an official visit to Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to visit Turkey in the near future.

Armenia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the Armenian Government have given to proposals for a ceasefire and a withdrawal or Armenian troops from Azerbaijan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Armenian Government have responded positively to the latest trilateral initiative by the Governments of the United States, Turkey and Russia for a ceasefire and a withdrawal of troops from in and around Nagorno-Karabakh, and for a resumption of talks under the auspices of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe. However, the Armenian Government have not yet given their formal approval to this plan. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I will use the opportunity of our meeting with the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Armenia on 27 May to urge the Armenian Government to accept this latest proposal, and to use their influence with the authorities in Nagorno-Karabakh to do the same.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 May at column 352.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to his statement of 2 April, Official Report, column 774, if he will make a statement on progress towards the attainment of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Since 2 April, President Clinton and President Yeltsin have agreed to pursue negotiations towards a multilateral test ban. The United States will be consulting further with other nuclear powers, including the United Kingdom. Our concern will remain the safety of existing nuclear weapons, and to ensure that any eventual agreement is as effective as possible in contributing to non-proliferation.

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the issue of human rights and the autonomy of non-governmental organisations with the Indonesian authorities at the Tokyo G7 meeting and at the Paris consortium meeting on Indonesia in July.

Mr. Goodlad: We and our EC partners maintain a regular dialogue on human rights and related matters with the Indonesian authorities and raise these issues at meetings of the appropriate international bodies.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current situation of the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia with regard to international recognition, and qualification for assistance from know-how funds, PHARE funds, the World bank, the International Monetary Fund and European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With respect to recognition of Macedonia by the United Kingdom, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Fry) on 23 April at column 243. The know-how fund does not extend to Macedonia, but the United Kingdom has committed £2 million in bilateral assistance for emergency aid to Macedonia in this financial year. Macedonia qualifies for assistance from PHARE; 45 mecu has been committed. Macedonia is a member of the IMF and the EBRD, but not yet a member of the World bank.

Bosnia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific representations Her Majesty's Government have made to (a) Bosnian-Serb leaders, (b) Bosnian-Croat leaders and (c) Bosnian-Muslim leaders over the need to observe cease-fire agreements.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We take every opportunity to impress upon the Bosnian parties the urgent need to stop the fighting. We attach the highest importance to achieving a political settlement which could bring the conflict to an end, and fully support the work of the co-chairmen of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia to this end.

St. Helena

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the next ministerial visit to St. Helena will take place; and how many visits to St. Helena by (a) Ministers and (b) other official delegations have taken place in the last 10 years.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are at present no plans for a ministerial visit to St. Helena. There have been no such visits in the last 10 years. There have been two official delegations, both of which included Members of Parliament, over the period and various official visits by civil servants.

China

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Government of the Republic of China on the recent persecution of Christians in Shaanxi province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We are aware of this disturbing report through our contacts with Amnesty International and other non-government organisations. Although we have not raised this particular matter, we regularly raise human rights, including the continued persecution of religious believers, with the Chinese authorities, urging them to adhere to international standards of behaviour.

Greek Economy

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held during meetings of EC foreign ministers on the effect of sanctions against the former Yugoslavia on the Greek economy.

Mr. Garel-Jones: All countries can discuss the effects of sanctions with the international financial institutions, which are best placed to provide technical and, where appropriate, financial support. At the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 May, the Foreign Minister of Greece drew attention to his country's concerns about the effects of sanctions on the Greek economy. The meeting also agreed on the importance of rigorous implementation of the sanctions regime.

Georgia

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments he has made of the policies of the Georgian Government with respect to the principles of good government and human rights; and if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and the Government of Georgia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We urge the Governments of all the countries of the former Soviet Union, including Georgia, to respect the principles of good government and human rights in line with their commitment to respect UN and CSCE principles. We are concerned about reports of human rights abuses by both sides involved in the dispute in Abkhazia. I discussed this dispute with the visiting Georgian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Chikvaidze, on 24 May. Relations between the United Kingdom and Georgia are good. We have emphasised the need for the Georgian Government to continue to work with the UN and CSCE in seeking a fair and peaceful solution to the disputes on their territory.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the numbers of British citizens fighting as mercenaries in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports that British citizens have fought as mercenaries in the former Yugoslavia, but we have no information on the numbers.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with Herr Klaus Kinkel, the German Foreign Minister, following his recent visit to the Republic of Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Kinkel and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs both attended the WEU Council meeting in Rome on 19 May which issued a declaration on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, including Croatia.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Disputes

14. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost in the industrial disputes in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for the same 12-month period 14 years ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Five hundred and eighty-eight thousand working days were lost compared with 14 million.

Youth Unemployment

15. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for youth unemployment in Coventry.

Mr. McLoughlin: In April 1993, unadjusted claimant unemployment amongst under 25-year-olds was 5,969 in the Coventry local authority district.

23. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of people aged under 21 years out of work in Britain at the present time; and what information he has on the comparable figures for (a) France, (b) Germany, (c) Italy and (d) Spain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The percentage of people aged under 21 out of work in Britain, based on the latest autumn 1992 labour force survey, is 45·5 per cent. The latest comparable figures for the other countries in question are for 1991 and I shall, with permission, arrange for them to be printed in a statistical table in the Official Report.

The following is the information:

The latest comparable figures for the other countries are for spring 1991 and for under 20-year-olds

	Percentage
France	26
West Germany	3·3
Italy	33·1
Spain	33·7

The rate for the United Kingdom for the same age group and year is 15·2 per cent.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives she proposes to reduce unemployment among people under 21 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Young people aged 16 or 17 who have left full-time education are guaranteed the offer of a suitable place on youth training. Youth credits are enabling more and more young people to acquire the skills businesses need. Our aim is to offer a credit to all school leavers under the age of 18 by 1996. Young people over the age of 18 are eligible for the full range of employment and training measures available through the employment service and training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies, including the new initiatives announced by the Chancellor in his budget statement on 16 March 1993.

Business Start-up Scheme

16. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on progress on the business start-up scheme in the north-west.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional statistics show that over 5,800 people entered the business start-up scheme in the north west during the 1992-93 financial year, which was close to the number planned by the training and enterprise councils in the region.

Plans for the 1993-94 year have not yet been finalised, but the number of entrants is expected to increase to reflect the north west's share of the additional 10,000 places announced by the Chancellor in the 1993 Budget speech.

24. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on progress on the business start-up scheme in the east midlands.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional statistics show that approximately 3,800 people entered the business start-up scheme in the east midlands during the 1992-93 financial year, which was ahead of the number planned by the training and enterprise councils in the region.

Plans for the 1993-94 year are expected to increase to approximately 4,400 entrants, reflecting the east midlands, share of the additional 10,000 places announced by the Chancellor in the 1993 Budget speech.

Unemployed People (Schemes)

17. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many schemes for the unemployed have been introduced since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. At present, unemployed people are offered the greatest ever range of help—over 1·5 million employment and training opportunities in 1993-94.

Training and Enterprise Councils

18. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the effectiveness of the training and enterprise councils in the north-west.

Mr. McLoughlin: They are doing a first-class job. They are making a real contribution to their local economies through their support for training, education and enterprise.

Unemployment Statistics

19. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to calculate the total number of people seeking work in the United Kingdom in addition to the number claiming unemployment benefit.

Mr. McLoughlin: These figures have been calculated and published since 1985. They are derived from the labour force survey, follow internationally standard definitions and cover the number of people in the United Kingdom without a job, who are seeking work and available to start it. Since September 1992, these figures have been published for Great Britain every quarter.

Training for Work

20. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a further statement on the implementation of training for work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Training for work now gives long-term unemployed people improved opportunities to learn new skills, improve existing ones and to gain practical experience by doing temporary work.

Unemployment, Greenwich

21. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were registered as unemployed in the London borough of Greenwich at the last count; and what was the figure three years ago.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unadjusted claimant unemployment in the London borough of Greenwich stood at 5,135 in April 1993, and 2,604 in April 1990.

Unemployment, Holloway

22. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest available male unemployment level for the Holloway travel-to-work area.

Mr. McLoughlin: Holloway falls within the London travel-to-work area where in April 1993 unadjusted claimant unemployment for men was 327,253.

Job Plan

25. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on progress on job plan.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The new job plan programme, which I announced in the autumn statement, was launched on 29 March. Job plan workshops are one week events which help unemployed people assess their strengths, consider the employment and training options open to them and offer a priority in the application process to join other employment and training programmes.

Workshops are now being run throughout the country by a range of organisations from the private, public and voluntary sectors contracted to the employment service. Over 5,000 people are starting each week.

Acquired Rights Directive

26. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a further statement about the operation of the acquired rights directive within the EC.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Gentleman of 19 January 1993, column 183.

Unemployment, Northern Region

27. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for how many months since May 1979 the northern region has had the highest regional unemployment in mainland Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: Northern region has had the highest rate of seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in mainland Britain in every month since May 1979.

Information

28. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to introduce regulations governing the information which employers may keep about their employees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have no plans to legislate on this issue.

Training Credits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the vocational opportunities presented by training credits.

Mr. McLoughlin: Youth credits are issued to young people to enable them to obtain approved training from either an employer or a specialist training provider leading to national vocational qualification level 2 or higher. Since April 1991, 49,000 young people have taken up their entitlement to a youth credit.

Youth, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make an estimate of (a) the number of young people leaving school and entering the labour market in Lambeth in the last 12 months, (b) the percentage who obtained work on leaving school or college, (c) the numbers undergoing youth training and (d) the numbers obtaining qualifications as a result of that training during the last 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available in the form requested.

Youth Training

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have been waiting for eight weeks or more without the offer of a place; and what steps she is taking to provide youth training places for them.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are required to ensure that young people are made one or more offers of youth training within a reasonable period of time. In April—the latest date for which information is available—there were 3,436 young people in England who were covered by the YT guarantee, had been waiting for a YT place for eight or more weeks and had not previously had an offer of a place.

The contracts with TECs provide for regular reviews of the position on the YT guarantee both currently and prospectively. This Government continue to be committed to the guarantee and that is why TECs have been asked to treat this as a top priority. I am taking a close interest in progress in its delivery.

Job Plan Workshops

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines her Department has introduced concerning visits by hon. Members to job plan workshops; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 25 May 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about visits by honourable Members to Jobplan Workshops. This is something which falls within the responsibility she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The new Jobplan programme was launched by the Secretary of State on the 29 March. The workshops, which normally last for 5 days aim to help people who have been unemployed for a long time to compete more successfully for jobs and other training and employment opportunities.

Jobplan Workshops are run on the Employment Service's behalf by organisations from the private, public and voluntary sectors. Over 650 contracts have been awarded following a full competitive tendering exercise. The workshops provide assessment and guidance to the standards set out in the Statement of Service established by the Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate of the Employment Department.

Members of Parliament are welcome to visit workshops in their constituencies and guidance was issued in February to both Employment Service people and providers to ensure that visits take place as soon as possible after a request is received. I attach a copy of the guidelines which forms part of our contract with Jobplan providers.

Wherever possible we ask for advance notice of a visit so that arrangements can be made to keep disruption to the workshop to a minimum. Someone from the Employment Service will normally accompany a visitor to answer any questions that may arise about the programme.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Access to Programme—Non Employment Service Status

16.1 The Provider shall notify the Department in writing of proposed visits to the Programme by any person who has taken or will take no direct part in the conduct or content of the Programme (the 'Visitor'). Such persons shall include, but without limitation hereto, Representatives of Unemployment Centres and Members of the Press and Media. Notification shall be at least 7 days in advance in writing except in the event of an unforeseen visit when notification shall be by telephone as soon as possible.

16.2 Members of Parliament shall be granted access as soon as an accompanying representative of the Department is available.

16.3 Notification shall not include any person whose presence is related to the conduct or content of the Programme.

16.4 In determining whether any such person is a person whose visit shall be notified to the Department, as in Clause 16 the Department's view shall be sought.

16.5 Upon receiving such notification as required by Clause 16 the Department will inform the Provider as soon as reasonably practicable of the following:

(a) Any objection to the timing of the visit or nature of the person visiting. Upon receiving such objection the Provider shall cancel the visit or provide assurances to the satisfaction of the Department that such a visit will not be prejudicial to the conduct of the Programme.

(b) The Department's desire to have its authorised representatives attend at the proposed visit and accompany the visitor(s) and assist the Provider in the provision of information to the visitor.

16.6 The Department's decision shall be final.

Manufacturing Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the level of full-time adult employment in manufacturing since 1973.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between June 1973 and March 1993 there was a net fall of 3,219,000 full-time employees in employment in Great Britain.

Conditions of Employment

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans her Department has to commission records into compliance with regulations and legislation governing the conditions of employment of (a) persons under 16 years of age and (b) persons between 16 and 18 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Policy on the employment of young people above the minimum school leaving age falls within the responsibility of the Department of Employment. Legislation governing conditions of employment for this age group, where it differs from that applying to adults in the same occupations, is concerned primarily with health and safety matters.

The Government are advised on health and safety at work by the Health and Safety Commission. Relevant statutory provisions, which also include some restrictions on the employment of children below the minimum school leaving age, are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive and local authority inspectors under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

The Health and Safety Commission reports annually to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on enforcement activities under the 1974 Act. Its report for 1991-92 was published in December 1992. The Department has no plans at present to commission further information on compliance with health and safety legislation governing employment of children and young people.

Further provisions on the employment of children below the minimum school leaving age in England and Wales are contained in the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and the Education Act 1944, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Education. Enforcement of these provisions, and relevant local authority bye-laws, is primarily the responsibility of local education authorities.

All local authorities with responsibility for enforcement of legislation on children's employment were consulted recently by the Government in connection with the European Commission's proposals for a directive on protection of young people at work. The Government at present have no plans to commission further information on these matters.

Wages Councils

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 136, how many employers and employer bodies have made written representations on wages councils (a) for or (b) against abolition.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since announcement of the Bill, we have received 140 representations from employers and employer bodies supporting abolition and 25 against.

Employment Exchange Staff

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will outline the incentive scheme for employment exchange staff and its relation to the number of people in employment; and what is the total of such payments for the Ilford office for the past year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Michael Gapes, dated 25 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the incentive scheme for employment exchange staff, its relation to the number of people in employment, and incentive payments made in the Ilford office in the last year. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

We do not operate an incentive scheme, and therefore no incentive payments were made last year to people working at Ilford Jobcentre. We do however make use of a Civil Service wide scheme which relates pay more generally with overall performance. In doing so, we are following the principles of the Citizen's Charter White Paper, which recognizes that the ways in which people are paid can have an effect on performance and that pay systems in the public sector need to make a regular and direct link between a person's contribution to the standards of service provided and their reward.

Our adoption of this approach is consistent with progress towards the more businesslike delivery of services in the public sector, which is also embodied in the Citizen's Charter White Paper. Our standards of service to clients are an important part of our overall performance. These have been clearly set out in the Jobseeker's Charter and are displayed with information about performance in local offices. The focus of the Jobseeker's Charter is standards of service, such as waiting times and the accurate and prompt payment of benefit to those who are entitled to receive it—and not target numbers.

Whilst our activities have some impact on overall employment levels, by mobilising the potential labour force into active jobsearch, their effect is diffuse and complex and so can only be estimated rather than measured. The number of people in employment is determined primarily by the strength of the economy.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Protection of Employment Rights

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to extend the protection of employment rights of those at work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, currently before Parliament, contains a number of important extensions to employment rights, including in relation to maternity, written particulars of employment, itemised pay statements, trade union membership and unfair dismissal.

Manufacturing Unit Costs

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the manufacturing unit wage costs in the three months to February; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The manufacturing unit wage and salary costs for the three months to February 1993 are:

	Unit costs
December 1992	130·3
January 1993	129·3
February 1993	128·8

These are index figures which relate to the base year of 1985. More up-to-date figures were published on 20 May. Comparing the three months ending March this year with the three months ending March 1992, manufacturing unit wage costs showed the largest percentage fall since records began in 1970.

Training for Work

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances training for work participants who wish to start their own business can try out their business idea in a period of enterprise rehearsal, and then take up support under the business start-up allowance; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The provision of enterprise training under training for work is determined by training and enterprise councils (TECs). Training for work leavers are immediately eligible to be considered by TECs for support under the business start-up scheme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the latest unemployment figures for (a) the west midlands and (b) Coventry, distinguishing the figures for (i) adults and (ii) women.

Mr. McLoughlin: In April 1993, the unadjusted level of claimant unemployment in the west midlands stood at 290,666, of whom 289,465 were aged 18 and over and 67,604 were women. The equivalent figures for Coventry local authority district were 20,846, 20,783, and 4,761 respectively.

Creches

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps her Department is taking to encourage employers to provide creche facilities in the west midlands.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department encourages employers throughout the country to adopt family-friendly employment policies including flexible working and help with childcare, through publications such as "The Best of Both Worlds". The new out-of-school child care grant, delivered by training and enterprise councils TECs, will create some 50,000 new child care places for school-aged children over the next three years. TECS in the west midlands will be playing their part in this initiative, with a variety of local initiatives to encourage employer involvement in child care.

New Jobs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs she estimates to have been created over the past 14 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between December 1978 and December 1992, there was a net fall of 322,000 in the work force in employment in the United Kingdom.

Travel-to-work Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the timetable for her review of the travel-to-work areas; and when she expects to publish a new map.

Mr. McLoughlin: New travel-to-work area boundaries will be calculated using information on commuting patterns from the 1991 census of population special workplace statistics. These are due to be released by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys at the end of November this year. Revised travel-to-work areas, including maps, will be circulated for comment six to nine months after this date.

Defence Workers (South-west)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action her Department is taking to facilitate the employment of those formerly working in Ministry of Defence establishments in Plymouth and the south-west of England.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training progammes to facilitate the employment prospects of unemployed people. These are available to all unemployed people, including those formerly working in the Ministry of Defence establishments in Plymouth and the south-west of England.

Economically Inactive People

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures of economically inactive people by (a) region and (b) the whole of the United Kingdom expressed both in numbers and as a percentage of their respective populations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest estimates—not seasonally adjusted—from the labour force survey are given in the following table:

Labour force survey (not seasonally adjusted)
Economically inactive people aged 16 and over

Region	Number (thousands)	As percentage of total population aged 16 and over
Autumn 1992
South East	4,822	35·0
East Anglia	590	35·7
South West	1,412	37·5
West Midlands	1,518	36·9
East Midlands	1,140	35·6
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,453	37·2
North West	1,942	39·0
North	964	39·9
Wales	979	42·7
Scotland	1,510	37·9
Great Britain	16,331	37·0
Spring 1992
Northern Ireland	460	40·0
United Kingdom	16,801	37·2

Unemployment Figures

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the figure initially given for the expected increase for unemployment for April 1993 for the purposes of seasonal adjustment at his Department's press briefing on the morning of 20 May; what revisions were subsequently made to this figure; and what were the reasons for the revision.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 2,165, which was a clerical error in the departmental press office's briefing pack, subsequently corrected at the same meeting to around "five thousand" (4,965). No re-estimation of seasonal factors was involved.

ENVIRONMENT

Office Stock

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent evaluation has been undertaken by his Department of methods of assessing the environmental merits of existing office stock.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State launched a scheme at the end of last month specifically for the evaluation of the environmental performance of existing office buildings. This is run by the Building Research Establishment (BRE) under the title BREEAM. In due course, BRE will review the impact of the scheme. Property Holdings is committed to using BREEAM both in commissioning new buildings and appraisal of existing stock whenever major refurbishment is undertaken.

Air Conditioning Systems

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what technical guidance the Building Research Establishment has provided owners and operators of air conditioning systems to phase out CFC-dependent systems.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1989 the Building Research Establishment has published two information papers, two digests and eight journal articles and conference papers containing advice and guidance for owners and operators of air conditioning systems on the phase-out of chlorofluorocarbons. These publications, which are listed, address such issues as the availability of suitable alternative refrigerants, the conversion of existing CFC-based air conditioning systems to operate on alternative refrigerants, minimisation of CFC emissions from air conditioning systems, and the health and safety aspects of new refrigerants.

Council Tax

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made of the average change in council tax bills which would result from a change of the single occupancy discount from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent.;

(2) what estimate he has made of the average change in council tax bills which would result from a change of the second home multiplier from 50 per cent. to 100 per cent.

Mr. Robin Squire: The changes described would not affect the average level of council tax bills, because local authorities would still require to collect the same amount of money overall from the same number of dwellings.

Partnerships for Change Conference

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to ensure that the partnerships for change conference to be held in Manchester in September 1993 will include on its agenda adequate time for the discussion of third world debts, international trade, the policies of the World bank and the International Monetary Fund and other global economic issues.

Mr. Maclean: The partnerships for change conference will focus on the practical implementation of Agenda 21, mainly through case study presentations and workshops. Discussions are likely to cover financial and economic frameworks.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria will be employed in the selection of organisations chosen to participate in the partnerships for change conference to be held in Manchester in September 1993.

Mr. Maclean: Participants in the partnerships for change conference will be drawn from business and industry, environment and development groups, local authorities and communities around the world. They will have practical experience of sustainable development problems and solutions. A small number of representatives of national Governments and international bodies will also be invited.

Environmental Issues

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the Association of County Councils to discuss environmental issues.

Mr. Maclean: I regularly discuss issues of common concern with the chairman of the Association of County Councils, together with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of District Councils, in the Central and Local Government Environment Forum. The next meeting of the forum is being planned for July.

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the means by which he proposes to involve Parliament in the consultation process relating to the drawing up of the first United Kingdom national sustainable development strategy.

Mr. Maclean: As the next stage in the preparation of a national sustainable development plan, my Department will be issuing a consultation paper in June. Copies of this document and a summary of the responses will be laid before the House in the normal way.

Energy Use Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to update the report "Energy Use in United Kingdom Manufacturing Industry up to the Year 2000", published in 1984.

Mr. Maclean: Aggregate projections of energy use in United Kingdom industry to 2020 are given in Energy Paper 59, published by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1992.

In addition, my Department is sponsoring an analysis of industrial energy use and greenhouse gas emissions based on an understanding of energy technologies. The methodology is comparable with that underlying energy use in United Kingdom manufacturing industry up to the year 2000 and we hope to start publishing the results, including projections to 2020 under a range of assumptions, in 1994.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each of the 20 largest housing associations the number of houses under management per employee.

Mr. Baldry: Housing associations provide a wide diversity of accommodation, from general family housing to homes for those with special needs, including sheltered homes for the elderly, and hostel accommodation for single homeless people. The ratio of employees to units managed varies according to the nature of the housing managed as well as the circumstances of the individual association. The latest figures available, taken from the annual statistical returns made to the Housing Corporation at 31 March 1992, for the largest 20 housing associations are as follows:

Housing association	Total housing under management	Total bedspaces under management	Full time staff	Part time staff

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been (a) created and (b) lost in each enterprise zone on an annual basis; and how many jobs were lost in the area of each enterprise zone in each of the two years before its creation.

Mr. Robin Squire: (a) The total stock of jobs in each enterprise zone for the years 1981 to 1989 is available from the publications: "Monitoring of Enterprise Zones, Year Two and Year Three Reports" and the annual reports "Enterprise Zone Information", available from the library. The data for 1990 are due to be published this summer.

(b) Data on jobs lost and gained annually in enterprise zones area are available only for 1981 to 1983 and are published in "Monitoring of Enterprise Zones, Year Two and Year Three Reports".

No data are available on the number of jobs lost in the area of each enterprise zone in the two years before its creation.

Housing

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total amount of support given by his Department to (a) the Housing Corporation, (b) other housing funding, excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations in (i) England, (ii) Greater London and (iii) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure.

Sir George Young: The table gives figures for the main areas of spending other than local authority capital, which also includes support to renovation grants for the private sector and housing defects expenditure. Figures for other housing programmes—including rent officers, rent assessment panels, homelessness revenue grants, housing mobility, home improvement agencies, housing research, estate action revenue, grants etc.—are either not broken down by region, or are not available on a regional basis other than at disproportionate cost. Further housing outputs are also funded through expenditure under the urban block, providing over 5,000 new units this year, and improving many more.

[1] Figures from 1989-90 represent the housing element of Housing Revenue Account Subsidy only. The figures in brackets show the rent rebate element (the equivalent figures were previously part of DSS programmes).

[2] Housing Corporation expenditure broken down by its regions is only available from 1990-91. The figure shown in the table for London and the South-East combined represents the total for the Housing Corporation's London and Home Counties (NE), London and Home Counties (NW) and London and Home Counties (S) regions.

Legislation Timetable

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has, and under what timetable, to introduce legislation (a) to create an environmental protection agency, (b) to change administrative arrangements for national parks, and (c) to implement the provisions of the EC habitats directive.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 May 1993]: My Department is continuing to work for the early creation of the environment agency and to change the administrative arrangements for national parks. The required legislation will be introduced as soon as the necessary parliamentary time can be found. The Government intend to meet the timetable specified by the directive for any necessary transposition of its requirements into domestic legislation.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a statement on his legislative plans for new local government authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The Secretary of State may give effect to the Local Government Commission's recommendations by order under the Local Government Act 1992. The timing of each order is dependent on the commission's work programme and its recommendations.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to encourage research and development in joint heat and power initiatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government fully recognise the energy and environmental benefits of combined heat and power (CHP) and seek to ensure that the technology faces no unnecessary legislative or institutional barriers to its implementation. The Energy Efficiency Office promotes the wider use of the technology in all suitable applications and is working towards the target set by the Government in 1990 of doubling the present installed CHP capacity to 4000 MW by the year 2000. The best practice programme contains an element by which up to 49 per cent. support may be given to pre-competitive research under which CHP is supported.

Local Government Commission

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy on the independence of the Local Government Commission and the weight to be given to its recommendations.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission is an independent, non-departmental public body. It is required to have regard to the policy and procedure guidance issued by the Secretary of State. Once the commission submits its final report to the Secretary of State, he may, by order, give effect to all or any of the recommendations, with or without modifications.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give details of the number of people in England exempted from payment of the community charge on the grounds of severe mental impairment in each year of its existence;

(2) what is his Department's assessment of the number of people in England who (a) will be in receipt of 100 per cent. council tax benefit for the property element of the tax and (b) will be exempt from payment of the personal element of the council tax on the grounds of severe mental impairment;

(3) what is his Department's forecast of the number of people in England who were previously exempted from paying the community charge on the grounds of severe mental impairment and who (a) are liable for the water charge element of the council tax, (b) are liable for all or part of the property element of the council tax or (c) will be in receipt of 100 per cent. council tax benefit for the property element.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some 97,000 people were exempt from the personal community charge as of 1 June 1990 on the grounds of severe mental impairment. Figures for later years of the community charge are not available.

My Department does not collect information on the numbers of people with a severe mental impairment who are liable for the council tax, or who give rise to a discount, or who receive council tax benefit. Because, however, the council tax is a tax on dwellings, fewer people will be liable than was the case under the community charge. Water charges are not collected with the council tax in England.

Environmental Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish this year's "Digest of Environmental Statistics".

Mr. Maclean: The 15th edition of the annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" will be published on 27 May 1993. Copies will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the impact of British Nuclear Fuels' new radioactive discharge applications for the Sellafield area on levels of discharges of radioactive pollution around the United Kingdom coastline.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Detailed assessment of those members of the public who would potentially be the most exposed to radiation from the proposed discharges to the marine environment has confirmed that their doses would be well within nationally and internationally recommended limits and much less than doses from natural sources. It follows that the doses to the rest of the United Kingdom population would be even smaller. Full details of their assessment were included in an explanatory memorandum which accompanied the draft authorisations issued for public consultation on 16 November 1992. A copy of these documents is in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Widows' Bereavement Allowance

Dr. Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend widows' bereavement allowance to include men; and if he will make a statement on the application of section 51A of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no plans at present to extend the widows' bereavement allowance to widowers. Section 51A of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 has no application to the question whether widows' bereavement allowance should be extended to widowers.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to treat mortgage interest tax relief as official Government expenditure.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to change the accounting treatment of mortgage interest tax relief.

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to amend the civil service pension schemes to include as pensionable service years served by new entrants joining the service as temporary staff during the second world war, in cases where those staff became established after the war;

(2) what would be the cost of counting as pensionable all war time service by civil servants entering the service during the second world war who became established after the end of the war;

(3) what representations he has received on the pension arrangements applying to war-time service by home civil servants.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to amend the civil service pension scheme to allow unestablished service given before 14 July 1949, including that of temporary staff recruited during the war, to reckon in full for pension purposes. I have received no recent representations specifically about temporary staff, but do from time to time receive correspondence about unestablished service generally.

The most recent available estimate of costs is that, even if pre-July 1949 unestablished service were to count in full in the calculation of pension benefits only, both past and future lump sums being left out of the account, the total cost over the next 25 years for the civil service alone would be of the order of £400 million.

Empty Properties

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many empty properties in the owner-occupied sector have been bought under the scheme outlined in the autumn statement by housing associations in each standard United Kingdom region; and how many such properties were repossessed homes in each instance.

Mr. Portillo: The information for England is provided in the following table:

	Completed units	Repossessed units
Northern	584	25
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,376	89
East Midlands	1,376	104
East Anglia	801	33
South East	9,083	547
South West	1,533	127
West Midlands	1,583	62
North West	2,094	151
National Total	18,430	1,138

In Scotland 209 were purchased; none was a repossession.

In Wales a total of 1,198 properties were purchased, of which 95 were repossessions.

In Northern Ireland 743 empty properties were purchased of which:

141 were by Northern Ireland Housing Executive;

276 were by Northern Ireland Co-Ownership housing association and;

326 were by other housing associations.

Regional breakdowns for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, and repossession figures for Northern Ireland, are not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All the above figures are provisional at this stage and subject to normal end-year checking which may result in marginal adjustments to the final outturn.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend the housing market package for the purpose of purchasing empty properties to cover the whole of the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. Portillo: No; as my right hon. Friend said in his autumn statement last November, the housing market package was a time-limited measure, explicitly aimed at the overhang of empty properties in the over-occupied sector which was holding back activity in the housing market. The purchase of over 23,000 properties has achieved its desired result by providing a significant stimulus to activity.

Relocation

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the costs to the public funds of the relocation of Government employees by Government Departments over the past five years.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not held centrally.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will propose the introduction of a reduced rate of VAT on fuel for occupiers of public sector properties which are proven to be (a) difficult to heat and (b) located in areas in which it is colder than the British average climate.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider a reduced rate of VAT on fuel for occupiers of public sector properties which are proven to be (a) difficult to heat and (b) in a climate colder than the British average.

Sir John Cope: No. Differential VAT treatment for different sectors and areas would be difficult to administer and would undermine the revenue and environmental objects of the Government's VAT charges on fuel and power. In so far as fuel and power supplies to some public sector properties are already subject to the standard rate of VAT, this proposal would also contravene agreements with our EC partners.

Crossrail

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those organisations and companies, other than the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance, from which he has received recent representations concerning the crossrail project.

Mr. Portillo: We have received representations in recent weeks from the following organisations and companies:

The Corporation of the City of London
London Tourist Board and Convention Bureau
NFC plc
Regalian Group
Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors
Thames Valley Chamber of Commerce and Industry
Trafalgar House Developments Ltd.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Channon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the structure of the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Sir John Cope: We have no plans to change the present structure of responsibilities of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Public Employees' Pay

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the groups of public employees that have reached pay settlements on their pay round since the autumn statement; and on what dates those settlements were reached.

Mr. Portillo: Settlements have been reached in respect of the following groups:

Group	Date settlement agreed	Operate date of settlement
Royal Mail middle and junior managers	15 March 1993	1 January 1993
Armed Forces	12 February 1993	1 April
NHS doctors and dentists	25 March 1993	1 April 1993
School teachers (England and Wales)	1 April 1993	1 April 1993
Civil service clerical and secretarial staff	26 April 1993	1 April 1993
Civil service executive and support staff	26 March 1993	1 April 1993
Teachers in Scotland	29 March 1993	1 April 1993

Settlements have also been reached for a number of smaller groups.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the earnings of those public employees on top salaries as defined by the Pay Board Review Body by scale and group in real terms at January 1993 prices for each year since 1990-91; and if he will provide estimates for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo: Data on earnings, where this differs from the salaries and scales down, are not available. It is not possible to make estimates of pay rates beyond the current year. The other information requested is shown in the table.

Rates of pay at 1 April each year, at 1 January 1993 prices

Notes:
FR—Flat rate.
DP—Discretionary point.
[1] Numbers in post exclude the Northern Ireland Civil Service.
[2] Excludes London allowance of £2,000 (two star officers in the armed forces receive London pay and group 7 of the judicial salary structure receive London Weighting).
[3] The composition of each group is given in Appendix H to the 15th Report on Top Salaries Cm 2015 July 1992.
[4] The Lord Justice Clerk is paid a salary lead of £1,000.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those groups of public employees that have received pay offers in their latest pay round of less than 1·5 per cent., and if he will list those groups of public employees that have had offers of zero per cent.

Mr. Portillo: Negotiations and offers in respect of individual groups of public sector employees are confidential to the parties directly concerned.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many written representations he has received since 16 March seeking changes to the transitional arrangements for the abolition of exploration and appraisal relief which he announced in the Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: There have been a number of written representations on the transitional arrangements, both seeking changes and supporting the existing Finance Bill measures.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies and industry associations have met him or ministerial colleagues since 16 March to seek changes to the transitional arrangements for the abolition of exploration and appraisal relief which he announced in the Budget; and if he will list them.

Mr. Dorrell: Ministers have met a range of companies, industry associations and other interested parties who have put forward a variety of views on the transitional arrangements.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all companies and industry associations which have made representations to Her Majesty's Treasury since 16 March seeking changes to the transitional arrangements for the abolition of exploration and appraisal relief which he announced in the Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: Those companies and industry associations that have made representations and have yet to make them public are free to do so.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received the report of the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board following his review of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the Securities and Investments Board report which he asked for following the loss of Maxwell pension funds.

Mr. Lamont: The Maxwell affair—and in particular, the weaknesses identified in the supervision of the Maxwell companies—revealed a number of important shortcomings in the way that financial regulation had been conducted under the Financial Services Act. Accordingly, on 9 July last year, at columns 292 and 293, I informed the House that I had asked Andrew Large, the new chairman of the Securities and Investments Board (SIB), to conduct his own review of how SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities, with a view to strengthening the implementation of regulatory standards in practice. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security had previously announced, on 8 June, at columns 19-21, that he has set up for the Pension Law Review Committee under the chairmanship of Professor Goode to carry out a review of the framework of law and regulation for occupational pension schemes.

Andrew Large has now presented his review. It is published today and I am placing a copy in the Library of the House. It is a thorough and professional analysis, drawing on a wide-ranging consultative exercise with providers, users and regulators of financial services, both in the United Kingdom and in other countries. I am grateful to Mr. Large and I accept his conclusions. The Government will give full support to the implementation of his recommendations. The result will be a significant improvement in investor protection—the primary objectives of any system of financial regulation.

Effective investor protection can be delivered by a range of regulatory structures. The two-tier structure laid down in the Financial Services Act—statutory-based regulation with a strong practitioner input—is not the only option. The review also looked at a unitary—fully statutory—system, but concluded that the case has not been made for taking such an extreme step at this stage. The Government accept this conclusion—another major upheavel with all its associated costs would be unwelcome both to firms and to investors, especially as the assumed benefits of a different structure are far from guaranteed.

But while the existing two-tier regulatory structure should be retained, investors have every right to expect effective delivery. To this end, the changes proposed by Andrew Large are significant and radical, yet evolutionary. In its early years, SIB was right to concentrate on establishing a code of regulations. But rules, regulations and procedures are only as valuable as the diligence and skill with which they are implemented. It is now time to focus on supervision and enforcement to see that appropriate standards are delivered.

We need regulation designed to protect investors, to catch and punish fraudsters and to tackle sharp practice; while at the same time paying due attention to the costs to firms and to investors of operating the system. The review tackles head on the cost of regulation and signals a determination, including through direct control of SIB's resources and the setting up of a cost of compliance unit, to look at the justification of all regulatory costs. I welcome Andrew Large's proposals which should deliver increasing cost effectiveness hand in hand with effective regulation.

Reshaping regulatory effort in this way will require a partnership between SIB and all the bodies recognised under the Act. Each self-regulatory organisation, recognised investment exchange and recognised professional body has its separate and essential role to play. But the system must be driven and led by SIB as regulator of the regulators with a more active style of regulation, supervision and enforcement. I fully support the approach Andrew Large has recommended; SIB must set the standards expected of the front line regulators, supervise their delivery and ensure their enforcement. SIB's role and standing will be enhanced by its proposals for greater openness, cost effectiveness and public accountability giving investors and providers more confidence in the system.

Change is already in hand at Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, as foreshadowed in my statement of 9 July. SIB has been working with IMRO to rectify serious weaknesses in six main areas. A risk-based approach to monitoring has been developed to sharpen its focus and effectiveness, together with a significant increase in monitoring resources. There are new procedures for co-ordinating emergency cases and improvements to IMRO's admission procedures. New occupational pension scheme rules came into force in March and a revised code of practice of board members' interests was introduced in August. With the appointment of a new chairman and chief executive, these measures represent a vigourous response to the regulatory weaknesses at SIB and IMRO exposed by the Maxwell affair.

Improved investor protection will require full use of SIB's extensive powers, including the inherent powers derived from its powers to recognise the front-line regulators. Andrew Large believes that he will be able to achieve the major changes required within the current legislation. But in a number of areas he has indicated that if, despite expectations, SIB's powers prove inadequate to secure the required standards of investor protection when put fully to the test, he will not hesitate to seek legislative amendment.

I share the view that full use of SIB's powers should deliver the required improvements. The chairman of SIB has the Government's full backing in the use of these powers. I will, of course, keep this area under review and I will be prepared to take whatever action is necessary if experience shows existing powers to be inadequate. But such a development would be serious indeed because it would indicate that the co-operation needed between SIB and the front-line regulators to make the two-tier structure work effectively had not materialised.

I have asked the chairman of SIB to implement the recommendations of the review, in co-operation with the recognised bodies, and to keep me closely in touch with progress on implementation. As part of its plans for greater openness, cost effectiveness and public accountability, SIB will publish six monthly progress bulletins.

No regulator and no system of regulation an guarantee that all fraud will be prevented or identified. Nor can regulation replace the duty on investors to consider carefully how they invest their money. But the Government are determined that all the lessons of the Maxwell affair must be fully learnt.

Financial Services Act 1986

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to bring forward proposals to repeal or reform the Financial Services Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what reviews Her Majesty's Government are conducting of the working of the Financial Services Act 1986; and for what purpose.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 May 1993]: I have no plans to change the present statutory framework. On 9 July last year, following publication of the summary of conclusions and findings of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation's review of its regulation of Maxwell companies and the Securities and Investments Board's own assessment, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer asked Andrew Large, SIB's chairman, to conduct a review of how the SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities. My right hon. Friend's answer today to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) reports on the delivery of the review.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the working of the Financial Services Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 May 1993]: I received a number of such representations.

British Telecom

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the administrative costs of the 1993-94 sale of shares in British Telecom plc borne by class XVII, vote 1 of the March 1993 Supply estimates.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The administrative costs related to the 1993 sale of shares in British Telecommunications plc borne on class XVII, vote 1 in 1993-94 is estimated at £200,000.

Insurance Policies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which regulatory organisation controls the sale, in sterling, of United Kingdom insurance policies to (a) United Kingdom citizens located overseas and (b) those serving in British armed forces overseas where the claims are processed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 May 1993]: In general, any direct controls on the sale of insurance policies are likely to be the responsibility of the authorities in the country where the policy is sold. However, the rules of the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation apply in certain circumstances to the sale to United Kingdom citizens—including armed forces personnel—located overseas, of investment-based life insurance policies by life offices based in the United Kingdom.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals (Transport and Slaughter)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to review current practices of procedure concerning the transport and slaughter of animals within the European Community.

Mr. Soames: Directive 91/628 lays down conditions for the transport of animals within the Community. The Commission is due to propose further detailed rules, and we are pressing it to come forward with proposals for discussion as soon as possible.

The United Kingdom initiated discussions on EC proposals on the welfare of animals at slaughter during our presidency. Discussions are continuing and we will be seeking high welfare standards to be implemented and enforced throughout the Community.

Integrated Administration and Control Systems

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many IACS forms his Department have returned to farmers because they were incorrectly completed; and how many completed IACS forms were returned to his Department as a percentage of those sent out.

Mr. Curry: Regional service centres are now undertaking detailed checks of the IACS forms, but figures are not available on the number where further information may be required to determine eligibility for aid.

In order to ensure that every potential applicant received an information pack, my Department distributed IACS forms and explanatory booklets to all major and minor holdings on our records, comprising some 190,000 in England. We recognised that some of these would not be eligible but we were not willing to take the risk of missing any potential claimants. Of the forms distributed, 45 per cent. have been completed and returned.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many IACS applications were received in the United Kingdom by 15 May.

Mr. Gummer: The number of applications received in the United Kingdom by 15 May was 157,129.

Local Authority Farmland

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of (a) the number of farms and (b) the total acreage of farmland that is owned by local authorities; and in which counties these areas are mainly concentrated.

Mr. Curry: The Department does not have this information. However, information on statutory small-holdings owned by local authorities is contained in the annual reports to Parliament on smallholdings in England and Wales which are available in the Library.

European Agricultural Advisory Committees

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the level of United Kingdom representation on the European agricultural advisory committees for (a) the oil and fats sector, (b) the fresh and processed fruit and vegetable committee and (c) social questions affecting farmers and members of their families; and what assessment has been made of the reasons for the difference in the United Kingdom level relative to other large EC countries.

Mr. Curry: Members of agricultural advisory committees are appointed by the European Commission on the basis of information supplied by trade and professional bodies. Their role is to advise the Commission on its work in the various agricultural sectors. National Governments are not involved in these appointments in any way.

Geographical Information Systems

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on geographical information systems used by his Department.

Mr. Curry: Geographical information systems using a variety of software products are currently employed by a number of divisions of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, including emergencies and food protection, environmental protection, plant health and seeds inspectorate, fisheries, and marine environmental protection. Additional systems are used by its agencies, including the Central Science Laboratory, the Central Veterinary Laboratory and ADAS.

Beef Premium Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the present beef premium scheme will be reviewed in 12 months' time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have already started to look at the details of the operation of the new beef special premium scheme with industry representatives.

EC Agri-environment Package

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about (a) the amount of money that each EC member state is expecting to spend on the agri-environment package in each of the next three years and (b) what schemes they intend to introduce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: In the United Kingdom we expect to spend £45·5 million in 1993-94, £75·5 million in 1994-95 and £97 million in 1995-96 on environmentally sensitive areas, moorland schemes, the creation and improvement of a range of wildlife habitats over a 20-year period, organic farming, the encouragement of new public access on set-aside land and measures to protect groundwater catchments affected by high nitrate levels. This is in addition to expenditure on such schemes as countryside stewardship.

Other member states are currently preparing their plans and the final contents are as yet unclear. So far, programmes for some parts of some member states have been submitted to the EC Commission but provisional details of only two national programmes have been made available. These are a French programme to encourage maintenance of extensive grazed pasture with forecast expenditure of FF630 million in 1993, FF1,050 million in 1994 and FF1,575 million in 1995, and a Dutch programme to extend their environmentally sensitive areas by 9,000 hectares, for which we do not yet have details of the cost.

WALES

Field Identification

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what method he intends to verify the information with respect to field identification numbers and areas submitted by individual farmers in form IACS 2A (1993): and who will carry out the verification.

Mr. David Hunt: Verification of the information submitted on form IACS 2A (1993) will be carried out by Welsh Office staff by means of a combination of administrative checks and site inspection visits.

Trainees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of young females who have had their youth training placements terminated in Wales in each year from 1987; and how many such terminations resulted directly from a trainee becoming pregnant.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The following table shows the percentage of young women who left youth training places prior to completion of their training in each of the financial years 1987-88 to 1991-92. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Information on the number who terminated training directly as a result of pregnancy is not available.

[1]Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are taken from the YT leavers survey and are not directly comparable with those for earlier years which were taken from the trainee database.

Agri-environment Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken to date by his Department to implement European Community Regulation No. 2978/92 on the development of a multinational zonal agri-environment scheme for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 17 May 1993 at column 55.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to extend agri-environmental schemes currently operational in Wales to cover the Ceredigion area.

Mr. David Hunt: The Cambrian mountains—original and extension—environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) already cover part of Ceredigion. I have no plans to extend the boundaries of these ESAs. Other schemes containing agri-environmental elements, such as the farm woodland premium scheme, the farm and conservation grant scheme and hedgerow renovation scheme, are already available in Ceredigion.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the proportion of secondary school children in each local education authority area in Wales who have taken illegal drugs.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A 1992 survey by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales reported that 36·6 per cent. of all fifth formers had used some form of drug or other substance, excluding alcohol and tobacco, during that year. That data broken down to local education authority level are too small to be significant.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the subject of non-departmental public bodies over the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The activities of non-departmental public bodies relate to many areas of my Department's work and thus the imprecise information requested is not available centrally.

Grant-maintained schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant-maintained schools have facilities for disabled students: and what percentage this is of grant-maintained schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All but one of the seven grant-maintained schools currently in Wales have some facilities for disabled students.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all of the successful capital grant requests from grant-maintained schools since he began making them, stating the work to be carried out and its value; and how many of these projects enabled disabled students to have access to these schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Details of the successful named projects in 1992-93 were provided in my right hon. Friend's reply of 1 February 1993 to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) Official Report, column 29. An announcement about the 1993-94 allocations will be made shortly.

A number of the projects included the improvement of facilities for disabled students.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the firms in Clwyd that accepted regional enterprise grants in each year in which they were available and the amount of each grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Details about individual companies accepting offers of regional enterprise grants are commercially confidential. However, the following table gives the total number and value of offers accepted by companies in Clwyd for each year since the start of the scheme on 1 April 1988.

	Type of grant
	Investment		Innovation
	Number	Offer value (£)	Number	Offer value (£)
1988-89	41	322,534	10	227,750
1989-90	105	894,996	15	322,384
1990-91	67	616,778	23	498,074
1991-92	47	476,112	16	347,632
1992-93	27	253,839	20	450,092
Total	287	2,564,259	84	1,845,932

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the firms in Clwyd that accepted offers of regional selective assistance in 1991-92 and 1992-93 and the amount of each offer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of all offers of regional selective assistance of £75,000 or more are published in the Employment Gazette following the first payment of grant. These details remain commercially confidential until that time including individual amounts of RSA associated with projects which have been publicly announced beforehand. Companies accepting offers of RSA in 1991-92 whose details have appeared in the Employment Gazette are:

	RSA Offer (£)
Processed Timber Products Ltd.	75,000
Keating Gravure Systems (UK) Ltd.	100,000
Kronospan Ltd.	3,000,000
P. and R. Graphics	100,000
Fibrax Ltd.	125,000
Betts and Co.	600,000

Cardiff Bay Development

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the effect on the south Wales economy of the construction of the Cardiff bay development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest economic appraisal estimates that the Cardiff Bay regeneration strategy, including the barrage, will attract some 23,000 new jobs and £1·2 billion of private sector investment to Cardiff bay. The wider south Wales economy will clearly benefit from activity of this magnitude, in terms of both additional jobs and changed perceptions of the region in the eyes of inward investors.

Power Stations

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect he expects the Hamilton Oil and Connah's Quay power station projects will have on the north Wales economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that the Hamilton Point of Ayr terminal and PowerGen's Connah's Quay power station projects together represent an investment of some £1·8 billion. Up to 2,400 jobs will be created during construction, with around 110 permanent jobs at the two sites thereafter.

Management Placement Training

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have found full-time positions after completing management placement training courses in Wales in each year since 1987.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of people who have found full-time positions after completing management placement training courses in Wales is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of (a) grant in aid and (b) other moneys given by his Department to the Welsh Development Agency in 1991-92 and 1992-93 expressed in (i) cash prices and (ii) at 1990-91 prices.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is set out in the following table:

	Total grant in aid cash £000	Total grant in aid at 1990-91 prices £000
1991-92	87,167	76,116
1992-93	78,359	68,425

No other resources were made available by the Department in this period.

Trade Missions

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the destinations of the trade missions being organised by the Welsh Office over the next three years to promote the products of small and medium-sized enterprises based in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The programme of missions for 1993-94 is as follows:

1993-94	Date
1. GERMANY AND SWITZERLAND Stuttgart/Zurich	6-11 June 1993
2. SINGAPORE AND MALAYSIA Singapore/Kuala Lumpur	14-26 August 1993
3. USA AND CANADA Seattle/Vancouver/Toronto	11-23 September 1993
4. ARABIAN GULF Dubai, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia	1-14 October 1993
5. BELGIUM Brussels	14-18 February 1994
6. SPAIN AND FRANCE Barcelona/Marseilles	13-18 March 1994

The programmes for the eight 1994-95 and 10 1995-96 missions have yet to be finalised. Decisions on likely target markets are made taking account of the most up-to-date information available and both programmes are under review. For 1994-95, however, the programme is likely to include destinations in North America, the middle and far east, Australasia and Europe and I will make an announcement shortly.

Inward Investment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage share of foreign inward capital investment by county in Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: The percentage share of capital investment promised by inward investment projects from overseas recorded since 1987 is shown in the following table. The figures are based on information provided at the time the projects were recorded and have not been amended to take account of any subsequent development.

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992

West Glamorgan	1·45	3·55	20·47	4·02	2·25

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new inward investment projects were secured by county in Wales in each year from 1988; how many new jobs were created; how many jobs were safeguarded; and what was the total capital investment.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is shown in the following table. The figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time the projects were recorded and have not been amended to take account of any subsequent developments.

Consultancy Initiatives

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many firms in Clwyd have been helped by consultancy initiatives in each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of firms which have received completed consultancies under the scheme in Clwyd are as follows:

	Number
1988-89	[1]24
1989-90	[1]96
1990-91	[1]113
1991-92	[1]149
1992-93	[1]140
1993-94	[2]9
TOTAL	531

[1] Completed.
[2] Completed to date.

These consultancy services are provided by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and delivered in Wales on his behalf by the Welsh Development Agency.

The scheme, as my right hon. Friend announced on 10 March, Official Report, columns 583-84, will continue at reduced rates of subsidy. This will allow the development of a new, wider and more flexible package of support which will help a larger number of companies, within the available resources. This new package of assistance, which will still include consultancy support, will continue after 31 March 1994, when the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme was due to end.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inquiries TEC-operated business information services received from businesses in Clwyd last year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information about the numbers of inquiries received by TEC business information services is collected only on a TEC area basis. North East Wales TEC, which covers Clwyd with the exception of the boroughs of Colwyn and Rhuddlan, dealt with 1,866 inquiries through its business information service last year. The total number of inquiries received in Gwynedd and Clwyd during the same period was 5,635.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new and existing small businesses in Clwyd participated in counselling sessions run by TECs last year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information about the numbers of new and existing small businesses participating in counselling sessions run by TECs is collected only on a TEC area basis. North East Wales TEC, which covers Clwyd with the exception of Colwyn and Rhuddlan boroughs, undertook 863 counselling sessions in 1992-93. The total number of counselling sessions undertaken in Gwynedd and Clwyd for the same period was 3,040.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many owners and managers of businesses in Clwyd received help and training from TECs last year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of owners and managers of businesses in Clwyd who received help and training from TECs last year is available only on a TEC area basis. NE Wales TEC, which covers Clwyd with the exception of Colwyn and Rhuddlan boroughs, supported 876 owner-manager training activities in 1992-93. The total number of owner-manager training activities undertaken in Gwynedd and Clwyd for the same period was 2,289.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Clwyd who started their own businesses in the last financial year received help and support from TECs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of people who started their own businesses in the last financial year and who received help and support from TECs is collected only on a TEC area basis. North East Wales TEC, which covers Clwyd with the exception of the boroughs of Colwyn and Rhuddlan, provided help and support for 171 people who started their own businesses in 1992-93. The total number who received such assistance in Gwynedd and Clwyd during the same period was 578.

Small Firms (Awards)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies in Clwyd that have received a small firms merit award for research and technology (a) stage 1 and (b) stage 2 award during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's SMART competition for small companies and start-ups is a highly successful scheme that provides support for innovation which is widely recognised as the key to company competitiveness. Over the five years that it has been operating, Wales has received 112 awards covering a wide technological range, representing 9 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. The following companies located in Clwyd have received awards over the past 12 months:

(a) STAGE 1
Global Specialties (UK) Ltd.
Optokem Instruments Ltd.

(b) STAGE 2
Henrob Ltd.
Quest Refrigeration Ltd.

Some 107 applications from Welsh companies have been received for this year's stage 1 competition, representing a 55 per cent. increase on last year. This reflects an increase in confidence in Welsh industry as well as a positive interest in innovation.

Foreign-owned Manufacturing Units

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage share of employment by county in foreign-owned manufacturing units in Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: The percentage share of employment by county in foreign-owned manufacturing units in Wales in each year since 1988 is in the following table:

	1988 Per cent.	1989 Per cent.	1990 Per cent.	1991 Per cent.	1992 Per cent.
Clwyd	18·0	19·3	18·8	18·3	18·8

Note: Totals may not add due to rounding.

Site Protection

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to protect sites of importance for nature and landscape conservation from being destroyed prior to applications being made for planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government encourage local authorities to adopt appropriate policies in their development plans, and to make full use of their powers under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949, the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and under planning legislation to protect sites which they recognise as sites of local ecological importance. I am satisfied that measures available to local authorities are sufficient to secure the protection of such sites.

Child Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the applications made to date for funding under the out of school child care grant in Wales, indicating the amount allocated in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The out of school child care scheme will be administered by the training and enterprise councils. As yet, no payments of grant have been made.

A470

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on plans for the improvement of the A470 Llanrwst to Conwy road at Tanlan.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Preparation of a scheme is in progress and a public consultation exercise is planned for later this year.

Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the taster courses and other forms of pre-course support in Wales which are aimed specifically at encouraging the re-entry of women into education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Six higher education institutions held eight taster courses for prospective teachers in the academic year 1991-92. The institutions concerned were UCW Aberystwyth, UCNW Bangor, UC Swansea, Cardiff institute of higher education, North Wales institute of higher education and Gwent college of higher education. UCNW Bangor will be holding a further taster course in September 1993. The taster courses provide men and women with the opportunity to learn more about teaching as a career. The courses are not aimed specifically at women but a substantial proportion of those attending have been women.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools and units for emotionally and behaviourally disturbed children he and his Minister of State have visited since September 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has visited any designated school or unit for such children since September 1992.

Youth Justice

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authorities in Wales to date have established operational plans for tackling discrimination in youth justice; and what is the number that have drawn up an anti-discrimination statement relating to youth justice.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the additional special protection areas and (b) wetlands of international importance that have been designated in Wales during the last two years; and what plans he has for further designations.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1 April 1991, six sites in Wales have been designated as special protection areas (SPAs) under the EC Birds Directive and four sites designated under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance (Ramsar Convention). The sites are as follows:

SPA/RAMSAR sites designated in Wales since 1 April 1991

	Date of designation
SPAs
Skokholm	5 August 1991
Traeth Lafan (Conway Bay)	10 June 1992
Ynys Feurig, Cemlyn Bay and Skerries	10 June 1992
Glannau Aberdaron (Aberdaron Coast) and Ynys Enlli (Bardsey Island)	10 June 1992
Glannau Ynys Gybi (Holy Island Coast)	10 June 1992
Burry Inlet[1]	14 July 1992
RAMSAR
Llyn Tegid	7 November 1991
Llyn Idwal	7 November 1991
Burry Inlet[1]	14 July 1992
Cors Caron	28 September 1992

[1] Joint SPA/Ramsar site.

There are a number of other sites in Wales which are under consideration by the Countryside Council for Wales in a rolling programme of designations. The council's target is to submit six sites to the Welsh Office in 1993-94.

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the subject of discretionary grants during the past 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: During the past 18 months, my right hon. Friend and I have received 35 representations on the subject of discretionary student awards. Such awards are the responsibility of local education authorities who can choose which students and courses to support and how much to spend.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new businesses have been started in Wales (a) in total and (b) by women in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information on the number of new business start-ups in Wales (a) in total and (b) by women in each of the last five years is not available.

However, VAT registration figures are available by year up to 1991 and for the period 1987-91 as a whole show a gross addition of 49,100 VAT registered businesses in Wales. The number of VAT registrations in Wales for each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	VAT registrations
1987	8,700
1988	10,900
1989	10,900
1990	10,200
1991	8,400
1987-91	49,100

Integrated Administration and Control

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received concerning the subject of Welsh language IACS forms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Cardiff Wales Airport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the new passenger air routes developed during 1992 and 1993 to date, to and from Cardiff, Wales airport; and what plans there are further to expand this number.

Sir Wyn Roberts: During 1992, services introduced at Cardiff, Wales airport included a scheduled link to Aberdeen and charter services to Dalaman and Antalya in Turkey, Gran Canaria, Lyon, Rome, Vienna and Berlin.

In 1993 charter services started to Paphos (Cyprus), Kos and Skiathos (Greece) and Adnan Menderes (Turkey).

The airport management has plans for additional new services but these are commercially confidential.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date he wishes bids for market-testing jobs in his Department to be submitted.

Mr. David Hunt: Dates for submission of bids have not been fixed. They will be set out in the invitations to tender which are expected to issue during the summer.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice has been given to units within his Departments on the selection of advisers they should appoint to assist them in the market-testing process.

Mr. David Hunt: The in-house bid managers have been given training to help them to identify the issues which they need to consider in formulating their bids. Continuing discussions are also taking place between the bid managers and the Department's efficiency unit about the selection of relevant advisers.

Redundancies, Gwent

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all redundancy and closure announcements involving more than 10 people made by Gwent companies since April 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his Department's forecast of the number of people in Wales who were previously exempted from paying the community charge on the grounds of severe mental impairment and who (a) are liable for the water charge element of the council tax, (b) are liable for all or part of the property element of the council tax or (c) will be in receipt of 100 per cent. council tax benefit for the property element;

(2) what is his Department's assessment of the number of people in Wales who (a) will be in receipt of 100 per cent, council tax benefit for the property element of the tax and (b) will be exempt from payment of the personal element of the council tax on the grounds of severe mental impairment;

(3) if he will give details of the number of people in Wales exempted from payment of the community charge on the grounds of severe mental impairment in each year of its existence.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information required is not held centrally.

NHS Joint Staff Consultative Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the next ministerial meeting with the members of the Joint Staff Consultative Council for the Welsh health service will take place.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These meetings do not take place on a regular basis and I have not made arrangements for a further meeting.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of the last five years the numbers of people receiving each social security benefit whose benefit was reviewed.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 14 April to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 667, what estimate he has made of the number of people receiving benefits in respect of myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available. No specific estimate of the number of people receiving benefits in respect of myalgic encephalomyelitis has been made. In general incapacity and disablement benefits are payable on the effects of an illness or disability, and not on the condition itself.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the additional benefits potentially available to single, double and multiple amputees, along with the relevant eligibility criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A wide range of benefits is available to sick and disabled people, including amputees, provided they meet the conditions of entitlement. In general, disability benefits are payable on the basis of the effect an illness or disability has on a person's everyday life rather than the condition itself.

There is no specific benefit provided for amputees; however, people who are born without both feet or have had both feet amputated at or above the ankle qualify automatically for the higher rate of the mobility component of disability living allowance, if they satisfy other conditions of entitlement.

Benefits (Automatic Transfer)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received from people concerned about Government plans to make pension and benefit payments directly to bank accounts: and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received various representations, including a number of letters from right hon. and hon. Members. The Government's policy is to ensure that people have a choice of payment method and are aware of the choices available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many benefit or pension recipients (a) collect benefit directly from a post office and (b) have benefit paid directly into (i) a bank or (ii) a building society;

(2) how many claim forms have been issued to new pension or benefit applicants which do not provide information regarding the Post Office as a location from which allowances can be collected.

Miss Widdecombe: The payment of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 24 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am, therefore, replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many benefit or pension recipients (a) collect benefit directly from a post office and (b) have benefit paid directly into (i) a bank or (ii) a building society; and how many claim forms have been issued to new pension or benefit applicants which do not provide information regarding the Post Office as a location from which allowances can be collected.

Although the number of beneficiaries for each benefit is known, because some individuals can receive more than one benefit, statistics on the total number of social security recipients are not available. However, at December 1992 around 4·3 m beneficiaries were paid directly into a bank or building society, while around 23·25 m were paid by a method of payment encashable at a post office. It is not possible to say, from our records, how many payments were made into bank accounts and how many into building society accounts.

In a recent trial, three versions of the Retirement Pension (RP) claim form were piloted. One version of the form did not refer directly to the Post Office as a location where RP may be collected, but it stated that other methods of payment were available and invited customers to request further information if required. Eight thousand copies of this form were issued. I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Visual Handicap

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to additional costs incurred by people with a visual handicap as a result of their disability.

Mr. Scott: Information about the additional costs incurred by visually handicapped people was included in the surveys of disability commissioned by the Government, carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, and published in 1988. Further information is available in the Royal National Institute for the Blind survey "Blind and Partially Sighted Adults in Britain", published in 1991.

Income Support

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures indicating (a) the number of claimants for income support in respect of mortgage interest in each standardised United Kingdom region, (b) the average weekly payment and (c) the total annual payment in each year since 1988.

Mr. Burt: The information available for Great Britain is in the following tables. Information for Northern Ireland should be requested from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to amend housing benefit regulations to secure that any disincentive for local authorities wishing to embark on private sector leasing arrangements as opposed to bed-and-breakfast accommodation is removed provided that value-for-money criteria are met.

Mr. Burt: The housing benefit subsidy arrangements are designed to provide a similar level of support for authorities whether they choose bed and breakfast accommodation or short-term leased accommodation to house homeless persons.

Benefits

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he is making to the availability of benefits for disabled people; when they will come into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: New regulations come into effect today. They will mean that the presence of a person who is registered blind is ignored for the purpose of the living alone rule when deciding whether a disabled person qualifies for the severe disability premium. This change recognises that someone who is blind should not be expected to care for a severely disabled person. It applies to income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit and will give worthwhile extra help to those who qualify.

Top-up Claims (Forecasts)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent forecasts of claimants for top-up claims were inaccurate; and what action he intends to take to ensure that future forecasting for changes in benefit schemes is improved.

Mr. Scott: Forecasts of claims to any new benefit scheme are subject to significant margins of error as they are dependent upon estimates of both the eligible population and their likely claiming behaviour. Estimating eligibility for disability benefits is particularly difficult as the eligible population can only be identified through surveys.

Top-up claims to disability living allowance could be made by all those aged under 65 who were receiving either attendance allowance or mobility allowance. The forecast was that 137,000 of the eligible population would apply, the actual number to do so was 234,000. This underestimate of 97,000 was offset by an over-estimate of 61,000 for new claims so that overall, claims were within 4 per cent. of forecasts.

For the future, the establishment of the family resources survey and the improvement in social security statistical systems should help reduce the margin of error attached to future forecasts.

"Paying for Independence"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department has given to the Policy Studies Institute's findings from a survey of disabled people entitled "Paying For Independence", a copy of which has been sent to him; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have read with interest the first findings of the research undertaken by the Policy Studies Institute, and I look forward to reading it when it is published in the autumn.

Allowances (Processing Delays)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to compensate claimants who may have suffered financial loss, resulting in delays in processing claims for (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) mobility allowance, where the delays were less than eight months or where financial loss exceeded £10 a month.

Miss Widdecombe: Under the Department's special payment arrangements, consideration will be given to making an ex-gratia payment to someone who has incurred extra expense or suffered actual finanical loss as a result of official error.

Over and above these payments, compensation for loss of use of benefit can also be considered when payment of benefit is excessively delayed. A significant improvement to the arrangements, announced on 4 May means that, for a new claim, compensation can be considered if payment of the benefit is delayed by more than a period of six months plus the target clearance time for clearing the bulk of the claims—usually between 85 per cent. and 95 per cent.

Special compensation arrangements for late payment of benefit were also announced for those people who claimed disability living allowance, attendance allowance or mobility allowance on or after 3 February 1992 who were paid before 1 April 1993 and who suffered a delay of more than eight months in the payment of their benefit. For these people, a payment of £10 per month for each month which exceeded the eight-month period is payable to compensate for the late payment of benefit. No actual financial loss has to have been incurred before payment can be made.

Benefits (Abatement)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women have had their unemployment benefit abated due to receipt of a personal or occupational pension scheme in each year since 1981.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table.

Date	Numbers whose UB was extinguished due to receipt of an occupational or personal pension			Numbers whose UB was reduced due to receipt of an occupational or personal pension
	Men	Women	Total	Men	Women	Total
November 1982			3,900			16,300
November 1983			1,200			9,500
November 1984			1,000			9,700
November 1985			1,200			9,100
November 1986			1,100			10,700
November 1987			600			8,200
November 1988			700			6,700
November 1989	4,700	300	5,000	7,700	500	8,200
November 1990	4,100	200	4,300	7,600	500	8,100
November 1991	7,900	400	8,400	14,400	1,100	15,500
November 1992	10,900	900	11,800	16,600	1,600	18,200

Notes:

[1] Source: Half-yearly analysis of unemployed claimants.

[2] No information was available for 1981 due to industrial action.

[3] The age threshold for abatement of UB by an occupational pension was reduced from age 60 to age 55 from 1 January 1989.

[4] The abatement rule was extended to include personal pensions from 9 October 1989.

[5] A separate breakdown for men and women is not available for the years up to 1988. However, the number of women in the total figure for these years is believed to be negligible as it would only have applied to the small number of women who claimed UB after the age of 60 years and who received occupational pensions of an amount in excess of the threshold.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level at current prices of the £35 abatement provision on occupational pensioners in the year it was introduced.

Mr. Burt: The current value of the threshold for the abatement provision on occupational and personal pensions would be £66·44 per week.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability living allowance appeals have been heard by disability appeal tribunals; and in how many cases the appeal succeeded wholly or in part.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 24 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many Disability Living Allowance (DLA) appeals have been heard by Disability Appeal Tribunals (DATS) and in how many cases the appeal succeeded wholly or in part.

For the period February 1992 to 30 April 1993 there have been a total of 319 appeals heard by the DATs. Of these some 133 succeeded in their appeal either wholly or in part.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take to reduce waiting times for attendance allowance, mobility allowance and disability living allowance from application to appeal hearing.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 24 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what action he intends to take to reduce waiting time for Attendance Allowance (AA), Mobility Allowance (Mob A) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA) from application for appeal to appeal hearing.

There are a number of current initiatives that have been instigated with a view to speeding up the throughput of appeal hearings. These include:—

The establishment of a centralised Appeals Unit to process all applications for appeal relating to DLA, MoB A, AA (under 65) and transitional AA.

The availability of additional resources to improve the speed with which an appeal submission is prepared.

The setting of aggressive internal targets to ensure that external performance indicators are achieved.

The improvement of courier arrangements to ensure next day delivery to the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS)—Disability Appeal Tribunal Central Office (DATCO) of all submissions despatched from the Fylde.

The arrangement of monthly liaison meetings with ITS to identify any problem areas and introduce operational improvements.

The planning of a pilot scheme with the aim of streamlining the current style of submission.

It should be noted that once appeals have been prepared and submitted by BA the actual scheduling and subsequent hearing of them falls wholly within the remit of ITS. This is an area over which BA does not have absolute control.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what lessons have been learned from the introduction of disability living allowance which could be applied to the introduction of new benefits in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Changes to the social security scheme are always formally evaluated against both their policy and operational objectives. Some valuable points have already emerged which will help to inform future developments.

Pensions

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, when he intends to establish an executive agency for war pensioners.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1993, col. 602]: I am pleased to be able to announce that Mr. Peter Mathison has been appointed as the new chief executive for the War Pensions agency. He will take up appointment as chief executive designate on 1 June 1993 pending the launch of the Agency in April 1994. The appointment is for an initial three-year term.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Services

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police services in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is published annually in the "Police and Constabulary Almanac, Official Register". A copy of the 1993 edition has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take the necessary steps to arrange for the prefix royal to added to each of the police services in England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Prison Escort Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all civil servants and their past responsibilities where they have subsequently joined any of the companies involved in tenders for British gaols or court escort services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to list former civil servants who may subsequently have taken up employment with private sector companies in this field, since staff below grade 3 who wish to take up outside employment are only required to seek approval to do so for a period of two years after leaving Crown employment, and in certain specified circumstances. Six former members of the Home Office have sought and obtained approval under these procedures to take up employment with companies involved in the provision of prison-related services. All were governor grades, three were governing establishments; one was head of custody in an establishment; one was in the inspectorate of prisons; and one in the remands contracts unit. In addition, a former police superintendent on secondment to the unit was given approval to take up employment with such a company.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if civil servants attempting to recruit staff for companies involved in tendering for Home Office business will in future face disciplinary action.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If, in relation to the tendering process for Home Office business, there is evidence of any impropriety on the part of Home Office staff, disciplinary action will be taken where this is considered appropriate.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will place in the Library a full copy of the research report from Sheffield university, prepared for his Department, on the prevalence of drug use among young people.

Mr. Jack: A full report will be published later this year and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of places for (a) men and (b) women at probation or bail hostels covering the Greater London area on 10 May.

Mr. Jack: As at 10 May 1993, there was a total of 360 places at approved bail and probation hostels in the Greater London area: 308 are designated for men; 33 for women; and the remaining 19 are available to either men or women, as required.

Emergency Warnings

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 May if he will outline the alternative arrangements to the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation, based on radio and television broadcasts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements for the use of radio and television to broadcast warnings to the public have existed alongside the siren system for a number of years and they involve the broadcasting of pre-recorded messages over existing broadcasting networks.

Police Inspectors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female police inspectors in England and Wales were members of ethnic minorities at the most recent available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At the end of January 1993, 28 police inspectors in England and Wales were members of ethnic minorities. All were male.

Deaths in Custody

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners died in custody in the 12 months to March; and how many have died since 5 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 24 May 1993:

Deaths in custody

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on deaths in custody. Between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993, eighty-six prisoners died in prison custody. Since 5 April 1993 nine prisoners have died in prison custody. These figures include deaths from all causes in both directly managed and contracted out operations.

Naturalisation

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current time lag in the processing of naturalisation applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For certificates of naturalisation granted in April 1993 the average waiting time was 21 months. For those applying now waiting times should average less than 12 months.

Police (Management Supervision)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the establishment in each police authority in England was employed on management supervision duties at the latest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not held centrally.

European Parliamentary Constituencies

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Fry) on 1 April, Official Report, column 385, if he will make a statement on progress in formulating proposals for the boundaries of European parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We hope to make an announcement on this matter shortly.

Unit Fines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the full evidence which led him to decide to scrap the unit fines system, including details of those cases in which too high a fine was given and those in which too low a fine was given.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 May 1993]: In reply to a question from the hon. Member on 19 May, columns 211-12, I have explained the reasons why my right hon. and learned Friend decided that it would be right to end the unit fine system. Although he was influenced, in taking that decision, by representations, both orally and in writing, from magistrates, members of the public and Members of Parliament, it would not be practicable to collate these representations as "evidence" and place them in the Library as requested. Nor would it be appropriate for the Secretary of State to comment on sentencing in individual cases.

Police Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities that have been considered for amalgamation (a) during his period of office as Home Secretary and (b) during the past 10 years; and which proposals did not proceed because of the current procedure for amalgamation (i) as the only or primary reason and (ii) as a contributory reason.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 May 1993]: No police authorities have been considered for amalgamation during the term of office of my right hon. and learned Friend. At the time of the abolition of the metropolitan county council's consideration was given to possible changes in the relevant police force areas. No changes were made because it was felt unlikely that reorganisation would improve effectiveness. The amalgamation procedure was not a factor in this decision.

Complete records for the last 10 years are not available. However, the records that are available indicate that detailed consideration has not been given to the amalgamation of any other force areas during that time.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1992.

Mr. Waldegrave: The House of Commons Select Committee on Science and Technology has published one report since April 1992. The Government's response is contained in the White Paper "Realising our Potential: A Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology", copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

The position in respect of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, whose remit relates to the work of both Her Majesty's Treasury and the OPSS, is covered in the reply by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, 24 May 1993, column 419.

TRANSPORT

Road Safety

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has conducted into safety factors in respect of new roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department carries out safety audits of new trunk roads before they are opened to traffic and specifically reviews their safety performance one and three years after opening as well as continuing with routine monitoring of safety. It also carries out a programme of research into factors which affect road safety, including, for example, pedestrian and cycle facilities, traffic calming measures, junction design, surfacing and safety fences. This is used in reviewing standards for new roads and in improving existing roads.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken on the additional injuries in accidents to pedestrians and cyclists caused by bull and roo bars on motor vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Pedestrian injury accidents are currently being investigated by the Transport Research Laboratory. As yet this research has been unable to reach firm conclusion concerning injuries from bull or roo bars; but I expect the investigations to show increased accident injury from such equipment.

Berkley Avenue, Greenford

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his inspector's decision on the inquiry into the proposal to close Berkley avenue, Greenford, between Greenford road and Oldfield lane north; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State for Transport expects shortly to announce his decision in the light of the inspector's report on the inquiry into the proposal to close a length of Berkley avenue. Arrangements will be made for the hon. Member to receive a copy of the decision letter.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of papers presented to the meeting of the high level forum on the channel tunnel rail link held on 19 May.

Mr. Freeman: Copies of the four papers presented have been sent to right hon. and hon. Members affected by the route of the rail link and placed in the Library. The papers are "Department of Transport—Property purchase and compensation policy", "DoT—Terms of reference for the further study of the London terminus", "DoT—Arrangements for the study and assessment of options for stations on the Union Railway" and a paper by Union Railways entitled "Route and stations development programme", all titles are prefaced by "Paper for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link High Level Forum".

Traffic, South-East London

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the official journey taken through south London on 18 May by the Minister for Roads and Traffic whilst in a 1907 taxi cab; and what proposals he now has to improve the road network and traffic flow in south-east London.

Mr. Norris: The hon. and learned Gentleman will be aware that the Minister for Transport in London was being driven in the splended taxi which the hon. and learned Gentleman so obviously admired, to Chester house in Kennington officially to open the excellent Royal British Legion taxi drivers training school.

The Department has three schemes in its programme for improving trunk roads in south-east London. It also pays transport supplementary grant at 50 per cent. of accepted expenditure and capital support to local authorities to improve their local roads. A further current initiative is improving the efficiency of the existing road network by the development of red routes.

Crossrail

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions were reached by Schroeders and Warburgs in its advice to his Department on the prospects of a private sector contribution towards crossrail; what form this contribution is expected to take; and if he will make available details of the financing of the project before 8 June.

Mr. Norris: Our consultants, Warburgs and Bechtel, both concluded that crossrail is a project that the private sector will find attractive. The basis on which the private sector would contribute to the cost of the project will not be settled by 8 June.

British Rail Pension Fund

Ms C[illegible]ston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the value of the surplus in the British Rail pension fund for the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the trustees of the pension fund.

Twyford Down

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to recent new proposals for a route for the M3 bypass around Winchester which aims at minimising damage to Twyford Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Alternative proposals for the M3 route currently being constructed through Twyford Down were submitted to my Department earlier this year by a media film company. The proposals were considered carefully, but they related to options which had already been considered and rejected.

A19, Durham

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the severity of disintegration of the newly laid surface to the A19 in County Durham.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Major maintenance work to the southbound carriageway of the A19 between Peterlee and Sheraton was completed in January 1993.

Minor chipping loss which has occurred over approximately 5 per cent. of the total area of surfacing will require remedial works under the maintenance period of the contract by the contractor at his own cost.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many patches of disintegration have been identified on the newly laid surface of the A19 in County Durham; which contractor has been asked to carry out repairs; and how long this is going to take.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Major maintenance work to the southbound carriageway of the A19 between Peterlee and Sheraton was completed in January 1993.

Inspections have identified 28 areas of minor chipping loss. Amey Construction Ltd., the main contractor, will carry out the remedial works at its own cost during the 12-month maintenance period. The works are programmed to take 10 days and will be carried out under contra-flow.

Road Improvements (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the usual length of time between the announcement of a public inquiry into a major road improvement scheme and its first hearing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The length of time between formal announcement and the opening of an inquiry varies according to the circumstances of the individual scheme. It is never less than six weeks in order to allow sufficient time for all parties to prepare their case.

West Wellow Bypass

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a map showing the proposed route of the A36 West Wellow bypass as announced in his Department's press release dated 19 May.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A public consultation brochure showing the route options now being considered for the A36 West Wellow bypass is being published on Friday 28 May. A copy will be placed in the Library on that date.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimated cost of building the east London river crossing; and how he has calculated any changes since his answer of 16 July 1992, Official Report, column 862.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The total estimated cost of the east London river crossing remains at £300 million at 1989 prices.

London Travelcard

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to protect the London travelcard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The Government are promoting discussions with public transport operators in London on how best to develop the present travelcard to meet the future needs of passengers and operators. We intend, when we seek powers for bus deregulation in London, to give operators the right to participate on fair terms in multi-operator ticketing schemes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Institutions (Official Visits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the tax treatment of official visits by hon. Members to European Community institutions in Brussels and Strasbourg.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have tabled a new clause to the Finance Bill which will exempt from tax payments of expenses for Members' visits to Community institutions in Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg, under the terms of the Resolution of the House of 6 December 1991, Official Report, column 582.

Relocation Expenses

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations his Department has had on the proposed reform of tax relief on relocation expenses.

Mr. Dorrell: A series of consultative meetings has been arranged by the Inland Revenue since the proposed reform of the tax treatment of relocation expenses was announced on Budget day. The meetings have been attended by representatives of employers, professional bodies and representative organisations.

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has as to how many taxpayers are affected by the freezing of the tax thresholds and allowances proposed in the March 1993 Budget, giving the numbers who have gross incomes of (a) less than £30,000, (b) £25,000, (c) £20,000, (d) earnings below the higher rate threshold and (e) earnings below the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates for 1993-94 are as follows:

Number of individuals affected

Millions
(a) Total income under £30,000	22·9
(b) Total income under £25,000	21·8
(c) Total income under £20,000	19·6
(d) Total earned income[1] under £27,145[2]	22·7
(e) Total earned income[1] under £21,840[3]	22·1

[1] Includes income from employment, self-employment and occupational pensions.
[2] The sum of the basic rate limit and the level of the basic personal allowance for those under 65.
[3] National Insurance upper earnings limit.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to how many foreign individuals currently living in the United Kingdom the Inland Revenue has granted non domicile status for tax purposes; and how much this concession cost the Exchequer in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available.

Overseas Dividends

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers receive income from overseas dividends; and what was the gross sum received before tax.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information requested is not available.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total number of taxpayers after the Budget changes in 1993-94, giving figures separately for (a) those who pay national insurance contributions only on incomes below the income tax threshold, (b) basic rate taxpayers with earned income below the NIC upper earnings limit, (c) basic rate taxpayers with earned income above the NIC upper earnings limit, (d) all basic rate taxpayers, (e) higher rate taxpayers with earned income above the NIC earnings limit, (f) all higher rate taxpayers and (g) all taxpayers.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available estimates are as follows:

Taxpaying individuals, 1993-94

millions

Marginal rate	Aged under 65	Aged 65 and over	Total
Lower rate	3·5	1·4	4·9
Basic rate	16·5	1·5	18·0
Higher rate	1·5	0·1	1·6
Total	21·5	3·0	24·5

Taxpaying individuals, aged under 65, 1993-94

millions

Marginal rate	No income subject to NIC	Earnings[1] between LEL and UEL	Earnings above UEL	Total
Lower rate	0·7	2·7	—	3·5
Basic rate	0·7	14·0	1·7	16·5
Higher rate	—	0·1	1·4	1·5
Total	1·5	16·8	3·2	21·5

[1] Includes earnings from employment or self-employment.

Overseas Entertainers

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of withholding tax deducted from overseas entertainers in the film industry and in total in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The total withholding tax deducted in each of the last five years from foreign entertainers and sportsmen has been:

1988-89	12,537,141
1989-90	13,387,341
1990-91	18,612,822
1991-92	16,690,738
1992-93	20,294,617

No breakdown of these figures is available.

Drugs Seizures

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many seizures of (a) heroin, (b) cocaine and (c) synthetic drugs have occurred in (i) the United Kingdom and its waters and (ii) Wales in each year from 1987.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 21 May 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is contained in tables 2.3, 2.4 and 2.5 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom 1991", and table A1.3 of "Statistics of drugs seizures and offendes dealt with, United Kingdom, 1987-91" (area tables), copes of which are in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vance-Owen Plan

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State since 17 May on the continued credibility of the Vance-Owen plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on 24 May, c. 375. by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Grantham, (Mr. Hogg).

Detention Camp, Gospic

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the existence of a detention camp at Gospic in Croatia; what action he has taken about the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received no representations. We remain in close touch with the International Committee of the Red Cross about its work in identifying, securing access to and progressively closing detention camps in former Yugoslavia. If any new evidence is brought forward of detention centres, we would immediately pass it on to the relevant organisations.

Human Rights

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the establishment of a United Nations Commissioner for Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We recognise the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations centre for human rights. With our EC partners we have proposed that the post of director of the centre be upgraded to that of Under Secretary-General for Human Rights/High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the names of the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations world conference on human rights in Vienna.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 13 May, c. 559. The precise composition of the delegation is being finalised, and will be transmitted to the conference organisers in due course.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's aims for the United Nations world conference on human rights in Vienna.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 27 April, column 371.

HEALTH

Royal Free Trust

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated by the Royal Free Trust since it became an NHS trust hospital; and what were the numbers treated in the two previous years.

Mr. Sackville: The figures for the first two years of the Royal Free Trust relate to finished consultant episodes in the general and acute specialties, and are as follows:

	Number
1991-92	33,822
1992-93	42,539

The total for 1992-93 includes patients undergoing renal dialysis.

No information is available centrally on the number of patients treated in the years before the Royal Free achieved trust status. However, a special exercise conducted for the House Select Committee established that there were 32,040 FCEs in 1990-91.

Nebulisers

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy regarding the free provision of nebulisers for use by patients in need.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health authorities must provide free of charge any equipment which, taking account of resources, needs and clinical priorities locally, they decide to provide as part of a national health service treatment programme. This applies whether the equipment is supplied permanently or on loan, and includes subsequent maintenance costs as well as initial supply. Hand-operated nebulisers may be prescribed by general practitioners and are free of charge to patients exempt from prescription charges.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of the preparation, production and distribution of consultation documents by all NHS trust applicants.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £5·93 million has been made available to regional health authorities for the cost of consultation on the four waves of national health service trusts during the years 1990-91 to 1993-94.

Family Planning Services

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure a free choice of family planning services on the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: National health service family planning is a self-referral service and people who wish to use it are free to choose their source of advice—their own general practitioner, another general practitioner if he or she is willing, or a family planning clinic. The Government's aim, as stated in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation" is that by 1994-95 the full range of NHS family planning services, however provided, should be appropriate, accessible and comprehensive.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research has been undertaken by her Department upon the effect of the inclusion of contraceptives on the selected list scheme upon levels of unplanned pregnancies in the United Kingdom;

(2) what assessment she has made of the effects of the extension of the selected list scheme in respect of contraceptives on her Department's target in respect of teenage pregnancies.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall) on 18 January at col. 97.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received in opposition to the extension of the selected list scheme to contraceptives.

Dr. Mawhinney: Approximately 420.

Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the legal status of the sub-committees of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs;

(2) what procedures were followed in making the appointments to the sub-committees of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs; and what were the criteria used to judge the suitability for membership of these committees.

Dr. Mawhinney: The sub-committees do not have a legal status which is separate from the main committee. The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs decided which of its members would serve on sub-committees taking into account their professional expertise.

Salmonella

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each year from 1987 to date, the number of cases of salmonella poisoning which have not been caused by eating infected food.

Mr. Sackville: The annual statistics published about confirmed salmonella infections are based on reports, by the public health laboratory service and hospital laboratories in England and Wales to the PHLS. The majority of these reports relate to individual cases and information as to the cause of infection is rarely available. In outbreaks involving two or more people, a cause other than food is reported infrequently. Occasionally outbreaks resulting from spread from person to person are reported, usually in an institutional setting.

Halcion

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the use of the drug Halcion in treating cases of severe depression.

Dr. Mawhinney: Halcion, or triazolam, is a treatment for insomnia and not for depression. It was withdrawn from the United Kingdom market in 1991 on grounds of safety because of psychiatric adverse reactions, including depression. Under the Medicines Act the manufacturer has rights of appeal against the permanent withdrawal of the drug and at the present time the matter remains under appeal.

Hospitals (Location)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what attention is paid in deciding on locations of hospitals to the relative age and level of car ownership of the surrounding population.

Mr. Sackville: The catchment area of a hospital will be determined by the contracts taken out by district health authorities or fund-holding general practitioner practices, on behalf of their residents and patients. Decisions on new hospital sites will be influenced by a variety of local factors, including accessibility.

NHS Employees (Freedom of Speech)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 487, when the final guidelines on freedom of speech for national health service employees will be published; and if publication will be delayed to take into account the findings of the Clothier inquiry.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not consider it appropriate to delay the issue of the guidelines and expect them to be issued in the near future.

Hospitals (Security)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she has taken or intends to take to improve security in NHS hospitals following the recent report of Crime Prevention Consulting Ltd.

Mr. Sackville: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary has given a detailed reply in another place.

A full report and its recommendations were presented at a conference, sponsored jointly by the Department of Health, the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts, and the National Health Service Trust Federation, on 11 May.

My noble Friend wrote to the chairmen of all health authorities and trusts on 13 May bringing the report to their attention. A copy of the letter is available in the Library.

The NHS management executive has also written—EL(93)47, a copy of which is available in the Library—to all general managers and trust chief executives, outlining the key messages in the report and asked them to review their procedures for crime and loss prevention in the light of the review and to submit by 30 September 1993 a report on improvements made or planned.

A new NHS security advisory group is being set up to promote a programme of security improvements and carry forward the recommendations of the consultants' report.

Fertility Treatment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting period for IVF treatment; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by specialty is published in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on the time that waiting list patients have waited for treatment of specific conditions is not collected centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to amend the waiting list system for IVF and fertility treatment for childless couples to take into account the age of that couple; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions about the appropriate treatment for a couple seeking help over infertility are a matter of clinical judgment. Age is one of the factors clinicians will consider in assessing a patients' suitability for any form of infertility treatment.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospital waiting times for patients in the Northern regional health authority for 12 months and 18 months; what were the comparable figures for each of the last two years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting times information by regional health authority is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", published twice a year, copies of which are available in the Library. Latest provisional figures for 31 March 1993 were published on 10 May 1993—press release H93/740. These show the number of patients waiting for more than a year in the Northern regional health authority has fallen by 72 per cent. or nearly 4,500 patients in the two years since March 1991.

Condensation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has available about the effect of condensation in the home upon people's health.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is aware of research carried out by the Building Research Establishment, an executive agency of the Department of the Environment.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will place in the Library a full copy of the research report from Durham university, prepared for her Department, on the prevalence of drug use among young people.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 May.

Laboratory Technicians

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 May, Official Report, columns 197-98, if the word technician in her answer means laboratory technicians.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

Concorde Trials

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the informed consent information and forms which were given to subjects who were asked to take part in the Concorde trials.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

I have today arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what types of information he is obliged to make public regarding British Nuclear Fuels plc; and which areas of its operation are treated as confidential.

Mr. Eggar: For the considerations affecting the Government's policy in this area, I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, Official Report, 7 July 1992, column 140 and 24 March 1993, column 612.

Waste to Energy

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the proposal for a refuse-to-energy plant in Belvedere.

Mr. Eggar: The timing of his report is a matter for the inquiry inspector. When my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade receives the report he will give timely but careful consideration to it.

My right hon. Friend will announce his decision on the application at the earliest possible opportunity after receiving the report.

British Airways

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will ask the Director-General of Fair Trading to investigate evidence of anti-competitive activities by British Airways against Air Europe, and its parent company ILG, since 1987;

(2) what inquiries he has commissioned into the allegations of anti-competitive practices by British Airways against rival airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Allegations of anti-competitive practices in European air services fall to be considered by the EC Commission under articles 85 and 86 of the treaty of Rome. The Civil Aviation Authority has powers to investigate complaints of anti-competitive practices on specific routes to and from destinations outside the EC and to consider appropriate remedies.

Under paragraph 4(1) of the schedule to the Anti-competitive Practices (Exclusions) Order 1980 (SI 1980 No. 979), any course of conduct pursued by an air transport undertaking solely in respect of carriage by air, otherwise than on a charter flight, is excluded from investigation under the Competition Act.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he was aware of the evidence of access by British Airways to computer information concerning rival airlines, when he gave his approval to British Airways' takeover of Dan Air in November 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The President of the Board of Trade's decisions in merger cases whether to refer proposed acquisitions to the MMC take account of comprehensive advice from the Director General of Fair Trading on the public interest issues raised by the merger concerned.

Additionality

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has available on how the additionality principle is applied within each member state of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the European Commission's third annual report on the implementation of the reform of the structural funds, pages 17 to 18, and the European Court of Auditors' annual report concerning the financial year 1991—Official Journal of the European Communities, C330 of 15 December 1992, pages 130-131, 146, 153, 346, 355, 359—copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

British Aerospace and Rover Group

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of the European Commission decision of 9 March requiring the Government to secure repayment of £44·4 million of state aid plus interest from British Aerospace and the Rover Group.

Mr. Heseltine: British Aerospace plc yesterday paid to the Government the sum of £57·6 million made up as follows:

	£ million
Repayment of state aid received by BAe and Rover in 1988 in connection with privatisation costs and buying out minority shareholders	11·0
Repayment of state aid representing the interest that would have been paid between 1988 and 1990 by BAe had it not been allowed to defer (interest free) the payment of the purchase price of Rover	33·4
Interest on the above sums through to yesterday	13·2
TOTAL	57·6

The Commission decision is intended to put BAe in the same position, after tax, as if it had not received state aid. Tax relief would have been available for interest of £33·4 million if it had been paid between 1988 and 1990. Tax relief would also normally be available for the interest of £13·2 million on a United Kingdom debt. BAe therefore now intends to investigate whether tax relief is available for both amounts. If relief is available on both sums at 33 per cent.—the current corporation tax rate—it will reduce the net cost to BAe by £11·0 million and £4·4 million respectively. The net cost to BAe of yesterday's payment would then be £42·2 million.

BAe has expressed concern that under United Kingdom law one or both of the amounts of £33·4 million and £13·2 million might not attract tax relief. If that were to be the case, BAe would have paid, and the Government would have received, up to £15·4 million more than the Commission envisaged. The Government understand BAe's concern and have also noted the opinion of the Advocate General that the Commission might reasonably assume that tax relief would be given on the payment of £33·4 million.

To ensure that the payment has the effect that the Commission intended, and that BAe is not disadvantaged by any difference between United Kingdom tax law and the tax assumptions made by the Commission, the Government have made arrangements to ensure that, if tax relief is not available in respect of the two payments, the company is returned to the same position as it would have been if it had not received the state aid. This would be done by transferring to the Inland Revenue, out of the sum received, an amount equal to the tax relief in question. That would then be set against BAe's tax liability. Details of the arrangements are in a note which is being deposited in the Library of the House. Both the European Commission and the Inland Revenue have been consulted about, and have raised no objections to, the proposed arrangements.

Science and Technology

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the science and technology policy of his Department will be affected by the White Paper on science, engineering and technology published today; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government want to see a new partnership with industry, bringing together public sector resources, to increase the nation's competitiveness. Today's White Paper on Science, Engineering and Technology commits the Government to partnership in science and technology to ensure they contribute more fully to the nation's wealth and well-being. The DTI is committed to making this partnership work. DTI's budget for industrial innovation is rising by some 15 per cent. this year to around £125 million, despite pressure on public spending. While the main responsibility for innovation must remain with industry, DTI has an important role.

Support for R and D projects from DTI's innovation budget is less than 2 per cent. of industry's own R and D spend. Thirteen United Kingdom companies individually spend more on R and D each year than DTI does through its innovation budget. Moreover, much of DTI's support goes to the large firms who account for so much of industry's total. In view of this, DTI will change the balance of its financial support so as to concentrate in future on helping smaller firms gain access to technology; building up partnerships between firms, with academia, and overseas; and ensuring firms have the services they need to innovate and to do business better. Smaller firms need effective local delivery of technology that may require sourcing on a local, United Kingdom or global basis. Both the access to that technology and the infrastructure which can provide it will therefore need to be strengthened, taking account of the Faraday principles, as will the promotion of innovation and the spread of best practice.

The Department will significantly improve companies' access to science and technology by making innovation services available locally, for example through one-stop shops. These services will place the national and international expertise on industry's doorstep. One-stop shops will help form sustained partnerships, bringing together public and private sector business services, including DTI technology and innovation services, for the benefit of the local company customer. The DTI will build on the local innovation networks which are already used by firms. These networks draw on expertise in higher education institutions, technical colleges, industrial research organisations and others.

DTI will put more effort into helping firms of all sizes come together to undertake R and D projects, including projects under the LINK and EUREKA initiatives. The Department will also work with other Departments, the research councils and in Europe to help this process to succeed. DTI will therefore:

- design its innovation services for delivery involving one-stop shops;
- support the establishment of local partnerships through which firms can obtain the technology and business services they need for innovation;
- consult industry over a more comprehensive information service about technology overseas;
- work to harness publicly-funded effort in science and technology;
- through its sector divisions and otherwise, act as a voice for business in science and technology throughout Government.

In view of the decision to increase support for technology transfer and best practice activities, DTI will be reducing its support for industry/industry collaboration through its innovation budget, and from 1 September will support only projects which will result in exceptional economic benefit.

Recognising the particularly important contribution that smaller companies make to the innovative process, direct single-company support to small SMEs will continue under the successful small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—competition and SPUR—support for products under research—scheme. However, from 1 April 1994 it is proposed to limit SPUR to companies with up to 250 employees in order to concentrate on the smaller firms which have the greatest difficulty in raising R and D capital.

Kvaerner Govan

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much intervention funding Kvaerner Govan has received over the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Offers of grant and details of the amounts paid are matters of commercial confidence between the Department and the company concerned.

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many ships Kvaerner Govan has received shipbuilding intervention funding in the last five years; and what is the total value of the assistance given.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 May 1993]: Offers of grant and details of the amounts paid are matters of commercial confidence between the Department and the company concerned.

Lead Batteries

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to ensure that the level of lead batteries currently recycled is maintained and increased.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware that a combination of factors, including the current low price of lead, is reported by lead acid battery recyclers to be making their recovery operations increasingly uneconomic. On 5 May my Department issued a consultation paper seeking views on the options open to the United Kingdom for implementing the Directive on Batteries and Accumulators Containing Certain Dangerous Substances (91/157/EEC). This explores the possibilities for maintaining and increasing the traditionally high United Kingdom recycling rate for lead acid batteries. Officials recently met the battery recyclers and their representative organisation, the Lead Development Association, and encouraged them to make proposals as part of their response to this consultation paper.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Trotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make an application to the European Commission to allow payments to be made from the shipbuilding intervention fund to Swan Hunter.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have written today to European Commissioner van Miert to ask him to reconsider the eligibility of British warship yards for the shipbuilding intervention fund.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level in each year from 1983 of the social cost grant provided to British Coal to help it meet the cost of additional contributions to its staff superannuation scheme in respect of early pensions and pensions for redundant miners; if he will provide full details of the terms and conditions associated with these grants; and what provision is made for alteration of social cost grant levels if British Coal meets its contributions by using part of the surplus in its pension fund.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 April 1993]: Grant provided to British Coal with respect to the staff superannuation scheme has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1983-84	3·9
1984-85	9·1
1985-86	12·5
1986-87	27·4
1987-88	47·6
1988-89	55·3
1989-90	59·3
1990-91	68·7
1991-92	72·1
1992-93	80·4
Total	436·3

Grant payments have been made under the relevant provisions of the Coal Industry Acts 1965, 1967 and 1987 and Coal Industry (Restructuring Grant) Orders 1987 to 1992. Grant will continue to be paid in respect of eligible expenditure by British Coal.

SCOTLAND

Police Services

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take the necessary steps to arrange for the prefix royal to be added to each of the police services in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Woodlands

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 2 February, Official Report, column 177, whether any access agreements have been made or proposed since October 1991 in respect of any woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission before that date.

Sir Hector Monro: The arrangements for securing public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in October 1991 and could not apply to land sold before that date.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out his current targets for the sale of Forestry Commission land in the United Kingdom in the current year and for each of the next three years.

Sir Hector Monro: As announced in Cm 2214, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96 for the Departments of the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Forestry Commission" (table 13.10), the Commission plans to sell 15,000 hectares of forest land in the current financial year and in each of the next two years. The sales programme for 1996-97 is under consideration.

Agencies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those bodies with executive agency status which are responsible to him; what plans he has to give executive agency status to any other Department or public body responsible to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have responsibility for the following executive agencies:

Agency	Launch Date	Chief Executive
Registers of Scotland	1 April 1990	Mr. James Barron
Historic Scotland	1 April 1991	Mr. Graeme Munro
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	1 April 1991	Mr. Andrew MacLeod
Scottish Agricultural Science Agency	1 April 1992	Dr. Robert Hay
Scottish Prison Service	1 April 1993	Mr. Edward Frizzell
Scottish Record Office	1 April 1993	Mr. Patrick Cadell
Scottish Office Pensions Agency	1 April 1993	Mr. Norman MacLeod

Chief executives respond, on my behalf, to letters and written parliamentary questions from hon. Members on operational issues within their sphere of responsiblity as set out in the agency's framework document. A copy of each framework document is available in the House Libraries.

I announced on 18 November 1992, c. 271, that the fisheries research service of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department is under consideration for executive agency status. Other candidates may be announced later this year. It is the Government's intention that all executive agency candidates will have been identified by the end of 1993 and to have launched them by mid-1995—end 1994 and mid-1996 in Northern Ireland.

Energy Conservation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he plans to take following the recent study by Scottish Enterprise on energy conservation in the domestic sector.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Enterprise was co-sponsor of a study of the use of energy in Scotland. This study has not yet been published.

Rape and Sexual Assault

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legislation to alter the range of sentences open to the courts in cases of rape and sexual assault.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland rape, and most other sexual assaults, are common law offences where the maximum sentences available to the court are not laid down in statute but determined only by the maximum sentencing power of the court in which a case is heard. Where a case is heard on indictment, a sheriff sitting with a jury may impose a sentence of up to three years' imprisonment or remit the case to the High Court for a higher sentence if he believes this to be appropriate. A judge in the High Court may impose a sentence of up to life imprisonment. We believe, therefore, that there are already appropriate penalties available to deal with even the most serious cases.

Wild Plants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the common and botanical names of wild plants which are currently categorised in Scotland as (a) protected and (b) endangered species; what measures he has in place to protect such species; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 provides protection for all wild plants. The subset of endangered or rare species is identified in schedule 8 to the Act, as varied by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (Variation of Schedules) Order 1988 (S.I. 1988 No. 288) and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (Variation of Schedules 5 and 8) Order 1992 (S.I. 1992 No. 2350).

It is an offence under section 13 of the Act for any unauthorised person to uproot intentionally any wild plant. In the case of the plants listed in schedule 8, it is an offence for any person intentionally to pick, uproot or destroy any example.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of abattoirs in Scotland and their combined average throughput in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 1991 and (e) 1992; and what are the most recent figures available.

Sir Hector Monro: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of abattoirs[1]	Average throughput per abattoir (LUs)[2]
1970	n/a	n/a
1980	66	17,693
1990	51	24,600
1991	50	26,477
1992	48	27,195

In 1993, 44 abattoirs in Scotland were licensed under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

[1] This excludes the small remote island abattoirs which generally operate for a short season each year and have a very low throughput when open.

[2] One LU (livestock unit)—one adult cattle/calf or seven sheep or three pigs.

Islands Shipping Services

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase subsidies for shipping services to Orkney and Shetland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I announced on 17 December 1992, at column 466, subsidy provision for shipping services totalling £15,129 million in 1993-94, of which provision for services to and from Orkney and Shetland amounted to £6·679 million. I now intend to make available a further £1·934 million in the current year to increase the amount of subsidy available for services to Orkney and Shetland in 1993-94 to £8·613 million. The additional assistance will be provided to P and O Scottish Ferries Ltd. to enable it to maintain the present level of roll-on/roll-off services in respect of passengers and cars. The assistance will enable P and O to increase their commercial tariffs for passengers and cars, while keeping net tariffs, after tariff rebate subsidy, to users of the service unchanged. The increases in commercial tariffs are necessary to enable continued provision of the present level of services. No change is being made in subsidies to freight services.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he intends to make regarding shipping services to the Scottish islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have decided to review the present arrangements under which I provide financial assistance to maintain lifeline shipping services to Orkney, Shetland, the Inner and Outer Hebrides and in the Clyde estuary. I also propose to review options for the future organisation and structure of Caledonian MacBrayne including the possible scope for introducing private sector participation in the provision of Caledonian MacBrayne's services.

Options to be studied will include continued public sector ownership of Caledonian MacBrayne as well as privatisation options; in the latter I will wish to explore the scope for greater employee involvement. I believe that the time is ripe for a further study of Caledonian MacBrayne following the transfer of the company's ownership to me in 1990.

The Government remain committed to providing continued financial support for lifeline shipping services to ensure that services can be provided at a cost to users which is consistent with the need to maintain and improve economic and social conditions in the islands.

The primary objective of these reviews is to explore the scope for improving the cost-effectiveness of the present arrangements in ways which are consistent with safeguarding the interests of the users of the services. I see greater efficiency and effectiveness in subsidy and service provision as leading to better services for the consumer, and wish to make it clear that our overall aim is to ensure that services are maintained and improved, and not in any way downgraded.

The Scottish Office Industry Department will shortly be inviting tenders for the necessary studies which will inform these reviews from suitable firms of economic and financial consultants.

Cockburnspath Bypass (Wind Levels)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects to receive the study to be conducted by Strathclyde university on the monitoring of wind levels at the newly constructed Cockburnspath bypass; and if he will publish the results of the study in full;

(2) what detailed proposals he has to divert vehicles prone to high wind levels off the newly constructed Cockburnspath bypass during abnormal wind conditions, indicating what vehicles would be affected and what the alternative route would be.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]:

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 May 1993, col 487-88.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has on the relative hazards of wind levels at the newly constructed Cockburnspath bypass compared with other parts of the A1.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 May 1993]:

The Scottish Office received a record of all accidents on the trunk road network which have been reported to the police. Abnormal wind strength was a contributory factor in the three recorded accidents which occurred on the Cockburnspath bypass on 21 January this year. Over the previous three years there has been only one other recorded accident on the A1 between Edinburgh and Newcastle where wind strength was a contributory factor. This occurred at Skateraw, just north of Torness power station, in February 1990. None of these accidents involved personal injury.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about his Department since April 1989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 May 1993]:

The Select Committee on Scottish Affairs has published one report since April 1989 on which the Government have yet to respond. Other Select Committees have made 21 recommendations specifically affecting my Department. Of these 20 have been accepted, in whole or part, by the Government or have been noted where no further action was sought.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with COSLA concerning the consequences for regional, island and district councils of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 May 1993]: None.

Policing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for public consultation concerning those parts of the forthcoming report of the Sheehy inquiry into policing in the United Kingdom which relate specifically to Scotland's police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The report of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards will be circulated to all interested bodies, including those covering Scottish interests, as soon as it is published. My right hon. Friend will welcome comment from those in Scotland on any aspect of the report.

Prisons

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the budgeted annual cost per prisoner place at (a) HM prison Greenock and (b) other prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The budgeted annual cost per prisoner place, including capital expenditure, at HM prison, Greenock, for 1993-94, is £30,665. This compares with a budgeted Scottish prison service average figure of £28,314 for the same year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Global Environmental Facility

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation his Department will have at the global environmental facility's participants' meeting in Beijing from 26 to 28 May; what discussions he has had with the World bank in regard to the global environmental facility meeting; and if he will make a statement on the way in which the global environmental facility is accountable to supporter states.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom delegation will be led by the deputy secretary of the Overseas Development Administration, supported by officials from the Department of the Environment and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The chairman of the Global Environment Facility has consulted United Kingdom officials on issues which will be discussed in Beijing. The GEF is accountable to participating states at the meetings of GEF's governing body, the participants assembly.

UN Development Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received a copy of the "1993 Human Development" reports of the United Nations Development Programme; and what action he intends to take in regard to its recommendations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The 1993 human development report is being published by the United Nations development programme this week. We welcome the report as a useful contribution to the development debate. We are studying the report and its proposals with great interest, and shall take appropriate account of them.

St. Helena

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been given to St. Helena in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures for St. Helena are:

	Number
1979	3,935
1980	3,795
1981	4,062
1982	5,834
1983	6,533
1984	7,471
1985	9,354
1986	9,202
1987	12,241
1987-88	11,057
1988-89	20,524
1989-90	24,239
1990-91	11,759
1991-92	9,147

Note: The method of recording aid expenditure was changed from a calendar year to a financial year basis in 1987-88.

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government evaluates the Government of Indonesia in relation to his policy relating aid to good Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We review regularly the performance of all aid recipients, including Indonesia, against the criteria of our good government policy.

In the case of Indonesia, although there are human rights concerns which we regularly discuss with the Indonesian authorities, British aid, which concentrates on tropical forestry, education, energy efficiency, economic infrastructure and public administration is, in our view, used to good effect. Indonesia has a good track record of sound economic management and has done much to reduce absolute poverty over the last two decades.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's position on the World bank's policy in relation to the development of a nuclear power industry in Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank is not involved in the development of a nuclear power industry in Indonesia.

Family Planning

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries are designated as priority areas for family planning and population assistance; what criteria are used to choose these countries; and what plans there are to involve more countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria, Tanzania and Uganda are designated as priority countries for United Kingdom family planning and population assistance. The selection criteria used to choose these countries were: the unmet demand for reproductive health and family planning services; their gross national product per capita; and the potential effectiveness of United Kingdom aid for population programmes.

The list of priority countries is kept under regular review. We also currently provide population assistance to Ghana, Namibia, South Africa, (via an NGO), Zambia, Zimbabwe and Nepal.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and which non-governmental organisations received support for family planning and related projects through the joint funding scheme in 1991 and 1992; what were the projects; and in which countries they took place.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 a total of seven non-governmental organisations

Narmada Dam

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the Indian Government on public access to environmental and hydrological studies regarding the proposed Narmada dam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are consulting the Indian authorities and the World bank about their plans to make environmental and hydrological studies relating to the Sardar Sarovar dam project publicly available.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any of the local cost aid provided by the Government to India for the Narmada dam scheme has been used to buy any British military equipment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Government have not provided any local costs assistance to the Narmada dam scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals (Notifiable Diseases)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the notifiable diseases of animals.

Mr. Soames: The following diseases of animals are notifiable in Great Britain:

AFRICAN HORSE SICKNESS
AFRICAN SWINE FEVER
ANTHRAX
AUJESZKY'S DISEASE
BLUE TONGUE
BOVINE SPONGIFORM ENCEPHALOPATHY
BRUCELLA MELITENSIS
BRUCELLOSIS
CATTLE PLAGUE in Ruminants and Swine

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of abattoirs in England and their combined average throughput in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 1991 and (e) 1992; and what are the most recent figures available.

Mr. Soames: Annual statistics derived from the survey of English slaughterhouses are given in the table. Comparative figures are not available for the years 1970 and 1980—details for 1985 are therefore included:

Year	Number of abattoirs open[1]	Average throughput per abattoir (LUs)[2]
1985	839	10,742
1990	659	12,730
1991	599	14,373
1992	545	15,278

[1] Open at any time during the year.
[2] 1 LU (livestock unit) = 1 adult cattle/calf or 7 sheep or 3 pigs.

The most recent figures available show that 438 abattoirs in England are currently licensed to operate under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

Fisheries Decommissioning

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposed decommissioning scheme for fishing vessels.

Mr. Curry: The Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Scheme 1993 was laid before Parliament today.

The Government have already announced that funding of £25 million will be made available over three years for decommissioning fishing vessels as part of the package of conservation measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 27 February 1992.

This scheme allows the first tranche of payments to be made during the 1993-94 financial year. The rules may be changed in subsequent years in the light of our experience with this first year's scheme.

There will be no preset rates of grant. Vessel owners are invited to submit tenders for the amount of decommissioning grant for which they would be prepared to scrap their vessel and surrender its licence. Applications will be ranked in terms of pounds per vessel capacity unit.

To be eligible for decommissioning grants vessels must meet the following criteria:

(a) The vessel must be registered in the United Kingdom. It must have been acquired by the applicant(s) prior to 27 February 1992 and must be over 10 years of age;
(b) The vessel must have spent at least 100 days at sea on fishing trips during 1991 and at least 100 days in 1992;
(c) The vessel must be over 10 m in overall length and hold a valid fishing licence. The descriptions of fish that may be taken under the licence must be the same or more extensive than under the license held on 27 February 1992. The licence and any entitlements associated with it will be permanently extinguished when the vessel is decommissioned.
(d) The vessel must be seaworthy: vessels over 12 m in registered length should have had a valid Department of Transport safety certificate on 1 April 1993.
(e) Grants will only be paid for scrapping vessels. The applicant must provide proof that the vessel has been removed from the Department of Transport Register of Fishing Vessels and has been scrapped within the European Community before and grant is paid;
(f) An application for a grant must be approved before the vessel is scrapped or the vessel will not be eligible for a grant;
(g) Successful applicants must have submitted proof of scrapping, de-registration and have surrendered all licences in respect of the vessel before 1 March 1994 otherwise they lose their right to a decommissioning grant.

Decommissioning complements the measures we are taking under the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992 to control fishing effort. It will help to ensure that the United Kingdom meets its MAGP targets. I believe that the scheme represents a significant contribution to help the industry to achieve the reductions in the fleet that are necessary if we are to secure a viable future for fishermen.

Fishermen are therefore invited to apply for decommissioning grants. Application forms and accompanying explanatory leaflets are available in local fishery offices. The deadline for receipt of application is 9 July.

Eastern Sea Fisheries Joint Committee

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will state the reasons for the time taken to reimburse the eastern sea fisheries joint committee under EC Council decision 89/631.

Mr. Curry: The average time for reimbursement of grant under Council decision 89/631 is at least three months after the application has been forwarded to the Commission. The committee's first application for grant was dated 25 February 1993, and the moneys have been paid into the committee's bank account.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on radioactive pollution from Sellafield.

Mr. Curry: The Minister and the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution have received approximately 83,000 representations in response to consultation on draft authorisations to discharge nuclear wastes from BNFL Sellafield. These are currently being considered.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many claims for payments under the sheep annual premium scheme were submitted after the prescribed date.

Mr. Curry: A total of 1,082 claims are estimated to have been received by my Department after the advertised closing dates of the first and second application periods under the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme. This represents about 2·6 per cent. of the total number of claims submitted. We repeatedly emphasise to farmers the importance of lodging their claims by the closing date.

Pesticides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to undertake a review of pesticide usage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Government policy is that the use of pesticides should be limited to the minimum necessary for the effective control of pests compatible with the protection of human health and the environment. This policy of minimisation is pursued through the statutory approvals system which sets maximum dose rates and tests efficacy claims and is backed by controls on use; surveillance monitoring of residues; usage surveys; and investigation of wildlife incidents. The Government also support an extensive research programme to investigate ways of minimising use. These policies have already led to significant reductions in the weight of active ingredients applied and we shall continue to pursue them in the future.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Committee has published 16 reports since April 1989. The Government's responses are contained in the following documents, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Supply of beer. HC 528, 1989
Implementation of the new beef regime. HC 402, 1989
Land Use and Forestry. HC 16 1, 1990

Peat

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on replacement of peat with alternative materials.

Mr. Curry: The Government are concerned to ensure that the United Kingdom horticultural industry continues to have access to efficient and economic plant growth media. Currently the use of peat is essential to enable the United Kingdom's horticultural industry to remain competitive. The Government have welcomed positive actions by the horticultural and landscape industries to examine and use suitable alternatives to peat—in particular in the amenity and retail sectors. Government Departments are supporting research into the needs of plants for growing media, and into alternatives to peat and the place of recycled materials.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of IACS forms were returned by 15 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: In order to ensure that every potential applicant received an IACS information pack, forms and explanatory booklets were distributed to all holdings in England and Wales. The number returned by 15 May amounted to approximately 45 per cent. of these despatched. We recognised that some holdings would not be eligible for aid under the CAP schemes covered by IACS but we were not willing to take the risk of missing potential claimants.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 April to the hon. Member for Carlisle, Official Report, column 454, when he expects to introduce the scheme for public access in ESAs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We plan to introduce the new measures to encourage public access in environmentally sensitive areas during the coming winter.

Science and Technology

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Department contributes to the Government's policy for science and technology.

Mr. Gummer: My Ministry is a science-based Department. It employs more graduate scientists and engineers than any other civil Department. The continual availability of reliable scientific information and expertise is essential to me for the sound formation, appraisal, implementation and evaluation of the Ministry's policies.

These are concerned with major aspects both of quality of life and economic performance, including public safety, animal welfare, environmental enhancement, and improving the economic performance of the agricultural, fishing and food industries.

The Ministry's scientific and technical activities range over provision of timely and objective specialist advice to Ministers, monitoring and surveillance, scientific investigation, formulation and management of policy-related research programmes, and promotion of technology transfer.

The Ministry will continue to depend on its own scientific services and those from external contractors in the public and private sectors. The Ministry's choice of supplier will in every case be determined according to its judgment of suitability, scientific capability and value for money to meet its policy needs.

I welcome the publication today of the White Paper "Science and Technology" by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in particular its recognition of the key role of civil Departments in determining their own needs and commissioning work from suppliers who compete to meet their specifications. I very much support the White Paper's emphasis on ensuring that the status of research establishments in the public sector is optimal for Departments to obtain the services which they need.

My Department has been in the forefront of this process. I have already carefully reviewed the options for ownership and management of the Ministry's scientific facilities, the outcome of which has been the recent establishment of the Central Veterinary Laboratory, ADAS and the Central Science Laboratory as departmental agencies, and decisions that the food laboratories should acquire a similar status within the Central Science Laboratory. The scrutiny announced in today's White Paper will take account of such reviews which have already been completed, recognising that science and technology are integral to the missions of Departments and that changes should not weaken the effective provision of scientific expertise and advice.

PRIME MINISTER

Domicile Status

Ms Harman: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to amend the rules concerning domicile status in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no immediate plans to introduce legislation on this subject.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Job Applicants (Travel Expenses)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to amend existing legislation and regulations to enable job applicants in Northern Ireland who have been short listed for a second interview, after an initial interview, to claim travelling expenses for the purpose of attending a second interview.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 25 May 1993:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to amend existing legislation and regulations to enable job applicants in Northern Ireland who have been shortlisted for a second interview, after an initial interview, to claim travelling expenses for the purpose of attending a second interview. The Secretary of State has passed your question to me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, for reply.

The programme which relates to your enquiry is the Travel to Interview Scheme. This is essentially a small scheme with limited resources and it is therefore not possible to help at every stage of a selection procedure. Where an employer needs to see a jobseeker on more than one occasion the employer might be expected to help meet the cost if the jobseeker cannot do so. By conserving our resources for providing help to attend the first interview more applications can be accepted and more jobseekers helped to find employment.

However the scheme is currently under review and the eligibility conditions are being examined to see whether, within the limited resources that are available, there are ways of helping more people more effectively.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to change the title of the RUC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: I have no plans to change the title of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the adjective Royal was given to the police service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: The prefix "Royal" was granted to the Royal Ulster Constabulary on its formation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Roman Catholic members of the RUC have been murdered by republican criminals in each of the past 25 years.

Mr. Mates: It would not be appropriate to provide this information since it might lead to the identification of the religious affiliation of individual officers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the RUC are known to have been Roman Catholic in each of the past 25 years.

Mr. Mates: Statistics regarding the community background of RUC officers are not available prior to 1990.

Since 1990 the percentage of officers with a Roman Catholic background is as follows:—

	1990	1991	1992	[1]1993
RUC (Regular)	7·75	7·72	7·84	7·87
RUC Reserve[2]	5·45	5·82	5·92	6·14

[1] As at 17 May 1993.
[2] Full-time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the ratio of RUC average earnings to average earnings in Northern Ireland in each of the past 25 years.

Mr. Mates: The information is available only for each of the past 21 years and is given in the following table:

Year	Average earnings RUC[1] £s/annum	Average earnings Northern Ireland[2] £s/annum	Ratio average earnings (NI) v. average RUC earnings

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects Lord Colville's report on the operation in 1992 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 to be available.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am happy to say that Lord Colville's 1992 report has been published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Reception

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance he has given to (a) the Independent Television Commission and (b) the BBC about improving TV reception along the Lancashire and Yorkshire border so as to ensure reception of programmes in Pendle.

Mr. Brooke: It is for the broadcasters to determine the engineering priorities aimed at extending or improving reception of programmes to specific areas.

County Hall and Battersea Power Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last received a report from English Heritage on the current condition of (a) County hall and (b) Battersea power station.

Mr. Brooke: I have not received and do not expect any report from English Heritage on county hall while the building remains in good condition.

I received a report on Battersea power station in February following a further inspection by officers of English Heritage which showed no significant deterioration in its condition. I understand that a further inspection took place at the end of March and that English Heritage is expecting shortly to appoint consultant engineers to conduct a more detailed examination of the building.

Royal Palaces (Fire Protection)

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will publish the report of the inquiry into fire protection measures for the royal palaces.

Mr. Brooke: I have today published the report and have also placed copies in the Library of the House. This follows from my announcement on 14 January that I had invited Sir Alan Bailey to chair an inquiry into the adequacy of fire protection measures at the royal palaces for which I have a financial responsibility, following the tragic fire at Windsor castle last November.

I am very grateful to Sir Alan Bailey and to Philip Kilshaw and Donald Insall, who assisted him in his task, for producing a thorough and well-reasoned report. It contains a full and definitive account of the Windsor fire and identifies the lessons to be learnt from the fire. The main part of the report contains a comprehensive assessment of the strategy needed to protect these royal palaces from fire, while at the same time preserving their historic fabric. It properly considers the risks, costs and value for money aspects of fire protection measures.

I am glad to hear that the inquiry team "found basic fire safety precautions generally in place, and a programme of work already in train to improve fire protection". However the report makes clear that a number of further measures are desirable. Both I and the royal household accept the general strategy recommended in the report as sensible and necessary. Indeed many of the recommendations are already being implemented or planned. Those measures which the inquiry team consider should be implemented at once will be so implemented. This includes work at the White tower, which has already started. Detailed professional surveys will be or have already been undertaken for each palace, to recommend safety improvements such as compartmentation and fire stopping consistent with preserving the historic fabric. Automatic fire detection systems will be installed in each of the palaces which do not at present have such a system. The timing of these and other protection measures will be decided in the light of the findings of survey reports, the scope for adjusting planned works programmes to accommodate additional fire protection measures, and the availability of funds.

The royal household and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, which are directly responsible for managing most of these properties, will now be considering the report in detail.

EDUCATION

Parents' Guide

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what expenditure there has been on the production and distribution of his Department's publication "Testing: the Facts", including the parents' guide 1993-94, "How is Your Child Doing at School?"

Mr. Forth: The cost of the production and distribution of "Testing: the Facts", including "How is Your Child Doing at School?", is estimated at £9,100.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to publish the information requested on the number of telephone calls and written requests he had received by 10 May for "How is Your Child Doing at School"; and how many copies were distributed in each of the 10 languages listed in the advertisement on 27 April.

Mr. Forth: The campaign to provide parents with information about testing has not yet ended. My right hon. Friend will announce the number of requests received in due course. An initial distribution of 981,000 copies of the leaflet was made to schools, libraries and local education authorities.

Assisted Places

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the level of parental contributions to the fees of pupils in the assisted places scheme in the next academic year.

Mr. Forth: Remission of tuition fees under the assisted places scheme is dependent on the level of fees at participating schools and the amount parents can afford to contribute. Subject to parliamentary approval, the parental contribution scales will be adjusted upwards for the school year 1993-94 as set out in the table. Where the relevant income for the appropriate financial year does not exceed £9,225 the tuition fees will be wholly remitted.

Special Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list on an annual basis the number of times the procedures under section 14 of the Education Act 1981 have been used, indicating the local education authorities involved, the special schools proposed for closure, the ones that were closed and the alternative provision made for them.

Mr. Forth: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The following list identifies special schools closed under section 14 procedures for each calendar year 1988-1992, including those which formed part of wider reorganisation proposals, where for example the establishment of a new special school following closure proposals involving several schools. Before approving proposals for the closure of special schools the Secretary of State must be satisfied that the alternative arrangements for pupils are satisfactory.

For the period 1983-1988, "Statistics of Education" published annually by HMSO show the total number of LEA maintained special schools.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to encourage headmasters to exclude disruptive pupils from school when it can be shown that the continued admission of such pupils deleteriously affects the education of other pupils in the school.

Mr. Forth: Head teachers already have the power to exclude a pupil on disciplinary grounds where they deem it an appropriate response to serious misbehaviour.

School Inspections

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many tenders OFSTED has received for the first group of schools to be inspected; and how many of these tenders have been accepted;

(2) how many school inspectors OFSTED has trained and registered to inspect secondary schools in the autumn; and what is the minimum number of school inspectors necessary to inspect schools in England and Wales every four years;

(3) how many school inspectors registered by OFSTED are currently (a) based in local authorities and (b) from private consultancies.

Mr. Forth: The arrangements for inspecting schools under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 are a matter for OFSTED.

I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average cost of a school inspection by his Department's inspectors; and what is his estimate of the average cost of a school inspection by OFSTED inspectors.

Mr. Forth: Inspections of schools formerly carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate as part of the Department for Education varied in cost from about £4,500 to about £35,000. The cost of inspections carried out under the Education (Schools) Act in accordance with OFSTED's framework of guidance are a matter for Professor Sutherland.

I have asked Professor Sutherland to write to the hon. Member.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will undertake a study of the particular staffing and building requirements of schools designed to contain and educate disruptive pupils.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to undertake such a study.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Education what consideration he has given to the setting up of schools where disruptive pupils can be temporarily or permanently placed.

Mr. Forth: LEAs have a power under section 56 of the Education Act 1944 to provide education otherwise than at school where they consider it necessary to meet a pupil's needs. The Education Bill now before Parliament contains provision to convert that power into a duty but it will remain for LEAs to determine the precise nature of the provision made for individual pupils in the light of the particular circumstances of each case.

Disturbed Children

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice has been issued through the Department for Education, the National Curriculum Council, School Examinations and Assessment Council or OFSTED about the teaching or modifying of the national curriculum for emotionally and behaviourally disturbed children.

Mr. Forth: The DFE, OFSTED and NCC publications listed include advice on the teaching and disapplication of the national curriculum for children with special educational needs. DFE circular 23/89 deals specifically with emotionally and behaviourally disturbed children. The statutory orders containing attainment targets and programmes of study for the national curriculum also contain advice on children with special educational needs.

SEAC's school assessment folders regularly include guidance on the assessment of children with special educational needs, and have made specific mention of children with emotional and behavioural difficulties.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools and units for emotionally and behaviourally disturbed children he has visited since assuming office.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friends and I have visited a large number of schools. As regards schools and units specifically providing for pupils with emotional and behavioural difficulties, my right hon. Friend has visited one school for such pupils and four for pupils with other special educational needs. I have visited one school for emotionally and behaviourally disturbed pupils and two schools for pupils with other disabilities.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

14. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Howard: More than 1·1 million council properties in England have been sold to sitting tenants since May 1979, under the right to buy. In Great Britain as a whole, our policy has enabled more than 1·4 million former public sector tenants to become owner occupiers.

Market Testing

15. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for extending market testing to white-collar local authority services.

Mr. Robin Squire: Last November my right hon. and learned Friend announced the Government's decision to extend compulsory competitive tendering to a wide range of local authority professional and corporate services. On 19 April this year I announced the timetable for implementation. Tendering will start from summer 1994. Detailed arrangements are now being discussed with the local authority associations and others.

Council Tax

16. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has comparing council tax levels according to political control of the local authority.

Mr. Redwood: The average band C council tax in areas under Conservative control in February 1993 is £456. This is £107 lower than the corresponding figure for Labour areas and £19 lower than the corresponding figure for Liberal Democrat areas.

Housing

17. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about unused public and private sector housing.

Sir George Young: The Government's aim is to bring a decent home within the reach of every family. To do this, it is important that we make full use of the existing housing stock and help homeless families by bringing empty property back into use.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement last November the provision of £627 million additional resources in England in 1992-93 to boost the housing market. £577 million of this, provided through the Housing Corporation, enabled housing associations to buy some 18,000 new, empty or repossessed properties.

In addition, local authorities have been allowed to spend virtually all the capital receipts they accrue between 13 November 1992 and the end of December 1993. This represents a substantial increase in local authorities' spending power and I hope that they will make effective use of the extra receipts, particularly in the areas of renovation and maintenance which would contribute to bringing back into productive use some of the 74,000 empty local authority flats and houses.

Resources for the estate action and housing action trusts programmes—£356 million and £87 million respectively in 1993-94—will assist in reducing the number of empty units in the larger and more difficult local authority estates.

The Government are keen to stimulate growth in the private rented sector. Deregulation of rents and the availability of shorthold tenancies for new private tenancies has removed one of the constraints which previously inhibited potential landlords. We offer a number of incentives to private individuals and institutions to make underused property available for rent: we are making £25 million available over three years to encourage retailers to let flats over their shops; tax incentives have been introduced to encourage householders to take in lodgers—from April 1992 gross rental income of up to £3,250 per annum has been exempt from income tax; following the success of pilot schemes last year we have expanded the housing associations as managing agents nationwide; and the business expansion scheme has realised about £1·25 billion in new investment, some of which has gone to purchasing empty or repossessed properties for renting.

Finally, a task force on Government Departments' empty houses has been set up to agree a programme of disposals of the 26,000 empty homes identified which are not needed immediately for operational purposes and to help bring them back into housing use.

Air Quality (London)

18. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the level of monitoring of air quality in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department will be issuing a consultataion document in the summer on the extension of national air quality monitoring by the further integration of local authority and central Government funded monitoring.

Meanwhile the hon. Member will be pleased to know that I am able to announce today that our enhanced urban network will be extended by the incorporation of a site in Bexley, close to his own constituency.

Black Businesses

19. Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department is doing to help small black businesses in the inner city.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1993-94 the Department is providing £408 million under urban expenditure programmes, which have among their objectives to stimulate the creation of small businesses and to help existing ones thrive and grow. A proportion of those funds go to small black businesses. City challenge partnerships and inner city task forces particularly identify ethnic minorities as a target group.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Unit

21. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when an anouncement will be made on the future of THORP.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my right hon. and learned Friend received the regulators' report on their public consultation on their proposed draft authorisations for the Sellafield site earlier this week. We are now giving it our urgent consideration.

Revenue Support Grant

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Cumbria county council on the level of the most recent revenue support grant settlements.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has received a number of representations from Cumbria county council about the level of revenue support grant in recent years. Each was given careful consideration before the Secretary of State announced his proposals for the year ahead. My Department has also received a representation from Cumbria in relation to the current review of SSAs which will be carefully considered.

Environment (County Councils)

23. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be meeting the Association of County Councils to discuss environmental issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I regularly discuss issues of common concern with the chairman of the ACC, together with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of District Councils, in the central and local government environment forum. The next meeting of the forum is being planned for July.

Standard Spending Assessments

24. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider changing the calculation method for standard spending assessments in respect of education for under five-year-olds.

Mr. Redwood: The method of calculation for standard spending assessments is currently under review in the light of new information from the 1991 census. This review includes an examination of the education elements.

31. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his Department's review of the standard spending assessments system.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his Department's review of the standard spending assessments system.

Mr. Robin Squire: Work on our review of standard spending assessments for 1994-95 is proceeding in consultation with local authority representatives.

We have invited local authorities to send us their views on SSAs and many have already taken the opportunity so to do. We shall consider all representations carefully, including those made to us during consultation on the revenue support grant settlement for 1993-94.

Local Government Finance

25. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss local authority finance.

32. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss local authority finance.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting representatives of the Association of County Councils at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance in July and again in October. My officials and those of the assocation meet regularly to discuss a wide range of topics related to the financing of local authorities.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the latest estimate of the extra capital spending by local authorities, generated by the relaxation of the rules relating to the use of capital receipts, over the three and a half years from the Chancellor's autumn statement on 12 November:

(2) what is the total sum of local authority capital receipts since the Chancellor's autumn statement to date; what proportion has been reinvested in building and construction work; and what his latest estimate of the total capital receipts due to be raised by the end of December.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 May 1993]: No outturn information is yet available for the period since the autumn statement. I shall be monitoring the extent to which authorities are raising and spending receipts during the period of the relaxation of the capital receipts rules. No new estimate of extra receipts or spending has been made since that published in the autumn statement.

73. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's best estimates of housing capital and other receipts likely to be received in 1993-94 and the amount of those receipts estimated to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities in each region and each class of local authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is currently receiving and processing budget returns for 1993-94 from local authorities. I will arrange for the estimates to be placed in the Library of the House when this process has been completed.

75. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were (a) the total housing capital and other receipts received by local authorities, (b) the amount of those receipts set aside as provision for credit liabilities and (c) the total capital receipts spent by local authorities on capital projects, in each region and each class of local authority in England for 1991-92 and estimated for 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table:

69. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of set aside capital receipts was used to redeem credit liabilities in each region and each class of local authority in England in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities are not required separately to identify the reserved part of capital receipts from other amounts set aside as provision for credit liabilities.

The following table shows the amount of external debt repaid using PCL moneys in 1990-91 and 1991-92. Information for 1992-93 is not yet available.

34. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received regarding Gloucestershire county council's budget 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Gloucestershire county council has challenged the cap proposed by my right hon. and learned Friend and suggested an alternative in support of which it has made oral and written representations. We have also received written representations from a number of school governors and Gloucestershire residents. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider all these representations very carefully before taking his decisions on the authority's final cap.

Merseyside Development Corporation

26. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of funding to the Merseyside development corporation in the present financial year and in the past three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The financial allocations to the Merseyside Development Corporation for these years are shown in the table.

	£ million
1992-93	37·50
1991-92	30·05
1990-91	24·00
1989-90	23·00

Plymouth Development Corporation

27. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the current position of the Plymouth development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Plymouth development corporation came into existence on 1 April 1993. A chairman, deputy chairman and seven other board members have now been appointed. There is one remaining vacancy on the board which will be filled in due course. The chief executive's post has been advertised and an appointment is expected shortly. The proposed budget for the regeneration of the Plymouth urban development area is £45 million over an indicative lifetime of five years, of which £7 million will be available to spend in 1993-94.

The corporation recently moved into its permanent accommodation in the Royal William Yard and it held its first board meeting on 11 May.

Sewage Treatment Works

29. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in upgrading sewage treatment works which were in breach of their discharge consents at the time of privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Maclean: The water industry's investment programme is making good progress. The latest figures available demonstrate a continuing improvement in the operational performance of sewage treatment works. In 1991 the proportion of works complying with its consent standards was 94 per cent. compared with 83 per cent. in 1988.

Homelessness

30. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new initiatives he plans to take to tackle the problem of homelessness.

Sir George Young: The number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities during the last quarter of 1992 was the lowest for two years. We have launched a number of initiatives designed to reduce homelessness and our spending plans will enable housing associations to provide 170,000 new social homes over the three years from 1992-93.

TUPE Regulations

33. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held with local authorities on the implications for local government of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Redwood: No specific discussions have been held on this subject, but it is occasionally raised with Ministers by local authorities and their representatives.

Redbridge (Employees)

35. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were directly employed by the London borough of Redbridge in 1981 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Redwood: The London borough of Redbridge employed 8,446 people in December 1981 and 8,883 people in December 1992.

Local Government Reform

36. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held since 6 May with representatives of the Association of County Councils about the reform of local government.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Victoria Street Premises

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 121, when he expects the building contract in respect of works at No. 1 Victoria street to commence; and what is the total cost incurred to date by his Department in respect of these premises since September 1991.

Mr. Baldry: Negotiations with the landlord of this building are expected to be concluded shortly, which should enable the building contract to commence in autumn 1993. Costs incurred to date are approximately £3·4 million.

Local Authority House Building

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for local authority house building.

Mr. Baldry: It is provisionally estimated that local authorities in England completed 300 new dwellings during the three months January to March 1993 and completed 3,000 dwellings during 1992.

Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing. As I said in my answer of 19 May to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer), Official Report, column 183, the Housing Corporation now estimates that public funds have enabled housing associations to make an extra 66,000 extra homes available to new tenants last year.

Travellers

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish for consultation his new draft guidance to local planning authorities on sites for gipsies and those of a nomadic way of life.

Mr. Baldry: My Department and the Welsh Office have today issued for consultation a draft circular containing proposed guidance to local planning authorities on the planning aspects of gipsy sites. This forms part of a range of measures designed to reduce illegal camping, including our recently announced proposals to reform the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

The purpose of the revised guidance is to ensure that gipsies are put on the same footing as other developers under the planning system and that the system recognises gipsies' particular accommodation needs.

Our objective is that gipsies should be given every encouragement to find, develop and run sites for themselves, as I know so many of them are anxious to do.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of local authority expenditure was funded by central government in each year since 1974.

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is as follows:

Proportion of LA revenue expenditure met by government grants, non-domestic rates, domestic rates, community charges and council taxes

	Government grants[1] as percentage of local authority expenditure	Non-domestic rates[2] as percentage of local authority expenditure	Domestic rates/ community charges[3] as percentage of local authority expenditure

⁴ The percentages do not add to 100 per cent. The difference is funding from balances and other adjustments.

Energy Management Assistance Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the anticipated gross financial savings which would accrue via his energy management assistance scheme as a consequence of achieving the scheme's target saving for carbon by the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: If energy management assistance scheme spend carries on to the the year 2000 as presently planned, the total gross financial savings in energy costs covering that period would amount to approximately £250 million.

Geographical Information Systems

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to make environmental data stored on geographical information systems in his Department compatible with (a) geographical information systems data stored by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, (b) GIS data stored by the United Nations environment programme and (c) geographical information systems data stored by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Howard: The Department is currently developing a geographical information strategy. This will cover the standards required for exchanging data with its associated agencies and other bodies, and will take into account the standards required for exchanging data with UNEP and other international organisations. HMIP does not yet have a corporate GIS and will be involved in the development of the Department's strategy. The National Rivers Authority has recently completed a feasibility study into geographical information systems and are now developing a more detailed specification including the necessary standards to facilitate data interchange.

Shared Ownership Programme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to extend the Housing Corporation do-it-yourself shared ownership programme to first time buyers and to exchange buyers suffering from negative equity.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation's do-it-yourself shared ownership programme is already available to first-time buyers. Sixty per cent. of the programme is reserved for tenants of housing associations or local authorities, which will release rented homes for those in housing need.

The Government have no plans to extend the scheme to existing owner-occupiers. To help people with negative equity who wish to move, the limit on building society's unsecured loans has been raised from £10,000 to £25,000 per person, and the security of one property can now be exchanged for security of another against the original loan without losing mortgage interest relief.

Easington (Enterprise Zone)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce enterprise zone status in Easington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Squire: The statutory procedures leading to the designation of an enterprise zone normally take at least six months. I expect to designate an enterprise zone in the vicinity of Easington at the earliest opportunity. I shall make a statement at that time.

Audit Commission

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the financial management review of the Audit Commission to be published.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 May 1993]: I am considering the arrangements for publishing the report of this review.

Inner City Wards, Manchester

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those wards of the city of Manchester which are categorised as inner city wards.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 25 May 1993]: Manchester's inner city wards, for urban programme purposes, are as follows:

Ardwick
Beswick and Clayton
Bradford
Central Cheetham
Gorton North
Gorton South
Harpurhey
Hulme
Levenshulme
Lightbourne
Longsight
Moss Side
Newton Heath
Busholme

Housing Refurbishment

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to provide new moneys for the refurbishment of old decaying houses in the public and private sectors.

Mr. Baldry: Bringing empty properties back into use is one of the Government's key objectives, and my Department has established a number of initiatives to tackle problems of disrepair and underuse:

14 per cent. of new allocations this year from the Housing Corporation's rented programme were for rehabilitation and a further 5 per cent. for short-life housing ('mini-HAT"). The Department is currently undertaking research into the role played by housing association rehabilitation.

£346 million has been allocated in 1993-94 to support local authority expenditure on private house renewal, including house renovation grants. Taken together with local authorities' own contribution of 25 per cent. this provision will finance a higher total expenditure on grants (£575 million) than in 1992-93.

In addition to other local authority capital expenditure on housing, the Government make considerable resources available through the estate action programme for the refurbishment of decaying houses in the public sector through regeneration schemes on run-down local authority estates. Since the programme was launched in 1985, over £1 billion has been allocated or earmarked for over 1,000 schemes. The programe's budget has increased from £268 million in 1991-92 to £347 million in 1992-93 and £356 million this year.

Since its establishment in 1991 the Housing Action Trust at North Hull has already spent some £25 million towards renovating houses in its designated area. Much remains to be done and a similar amount will be spent in Hull in this year alone. Two other HATs have been established at Waltham Forest and Liverpool, and tenants at Castle Vale and Tower Hamlets have recently voted for the establishment of HATs for their estates. Apart from North Hull, HATs are concerned mainly with the redevelopment or refurbishment of decaying high and low rise blocks of flats. The planned expenditure for HATs in this year is £86·8 million.

Under the Department's flats over shops initiative £25 million in grants towards renovation and conversion costs is being made available through local authorities between 1992-93 and 1994-95 to bring empty space above commercial properties back into residential use. The scheme is designed to be a three-way partnership between local authorities, housing associations, and private property owners.

The Government have set up a task force to oversee an agreed programme of disposals of empty homes owned by Government Departments which are no longer needed for operational use, and help bring these properties back into use for people in housing need.

The Department has launched a scheme to allow housing associations to act as intermediaries between private landlords and tenants, and is funding its administration costs. This scheme, Housing Associations as Managing Agents (HAMA), is designed to encourage people to let out property which would otherwise be empty by removing the stresses usually attached to being a landlord. Following the success of five pilot schemes during 1992-93, the Government have decided to expand the scheme throughout England.

The Government will continue to support and encourage the refurbishment of empty and decaying houses in the public and private sectors, and to welcome constructive suggestions on the balance of its expenditure programmes.

Deregulation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make available in the Library the list of powers and organisations relating to environmental protection which will be candidates for deregulation.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the anwer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities gave to the hon. Member for Harwich (Mr. Sproat) on 20 April, Official Report, column 131.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in environmental protection over the last year.

Mr. Maclean: In the past year we have taken action on the environment at all levels: local, national and international. The United Kingdom played a leading role in the Earth summit, and we are taking an active part in the international discussions to follow up the agreements reached there. The EC Environment Council made significant progress under our presidency on environmental issues, in particular in integrating environmental concerns into the development of the different sectoral policies. We set out our achievements and targets in domestic policies in the second year anniversary report on the Environment White Paper, published in October 1992.

Ventilation and Insulation

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend part F of the Building Regulations in respect of the ventilation and insulation of buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I am today issuing a consultation paper setting out our proposals for improving the requirements of part F of the Building Regulations 1991 (Means of Ventilation). Copies have been placed in the Library. The proposals have been introduced to improve and simplify the current provisions in dwellings; and to provide builders with a wider range of options on how these can be achieved. Requirements for non-domestic buildings are proposed which generally reflect the relevant requirements of the Workplace Health, Safety and Welfare Regulations 1992 so that new building work should not require subsequent adaptation.

EC Funding, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the date of the last meeting of the Merseyside support and framework committee for European Community funding; on what dates the committee met during 1992; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 27 April 1993]: During 1992, the directing committee for the Merseyside integrated development operation programme met on 7 July and 1 October. There were no meetings of the committee in 1993.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the names of the members of the Merseyside support and framework committee for European Community funding; and what are the names of the organisations represented on that committee by each member.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The directing committee for the Merseyside integrated development operation programme is composed of representatives from local authorities, Government Departments, statutory agencies and other organisations which benefit from European Community funding. Arrangements for future years are currently under review.

ReChem Incineration Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have received regarding complaints made to the European Commission on the prospective breach of EC directive 85/337/EEC by plans by ReChem to extend its toxic waste incineration plant at Pontypool.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have been asked to reply.

I have received one representation from the hon. Gentleman.

EMPLOYMENT

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to amend the 1984 Manpower Services Commission code of practice; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the employment service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 26 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about what plans she has to amend the 1984 Manpower Services Commission Code of Good Practice. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Code of Good Practice has been well received by employers since it was first introduced, and is still requested in large numbers. At this stage there are no plans to develop a new Code, but my Agency would, of course, consult widely should we decide to do so.

You may wish to know that we have recently reprinted the Code as part of a wider exercise to update Employment Service disability service literature. There have been no changes of substance to the advice and recommendations made in the Code but we have taken the opportunity to introduce descriptions of the new restructured services provided by the Employment Service to disabled people and employers. We have also included the new disability symbol which has the words "Positive about Disabled People". Some addresses have been corrected and some slight adjustments made to the text used where it had become outdated.

I enclose a copy of the reprinted Code which I hope you will find useful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Health and Safety

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 41, how the review of health and safety at work regulations will be conducted; which organisations will be invited to take part; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked the Health and Safety Commission to report, by the end of April 1994, on the impact on business of the existing health and safety regulatory arrangements and especially on the scope for further repeals or simplification of legislation which would not endanger acceptable standards of protection.

I am informed that the Commission is establishing seven business-led advisory groups to help it in this task, which groups will include members representing employer and worker interests and specific representation from the small firms sector. Through these groups and by other means such as case studies, and written consultation exercises, the review will draw on a wide range of experience and expertise from industry and elsewhere.

I understand that the Commission plans shortly to issue an open invitation for interested organisations and individuals to submit evidence to the review.

Unemployed Disabled People

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of unemployment among disabled workers was recorded in the most recently available quarter by the labour force survey; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The labour force survey asks people of working age if they currently have any health problems or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do. Estimates based on answers to this question will include people with short-term health problems and disabilities as well as those registered as disabled. LFS estimates for autumn 1992 show that in Great Britain the unemployment rate, based on the ILO definition of unemployment for people with all such health problems or disabilities was 21 per cent.—not seasonally adjusted.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women aged (i) 40 to 44 years, (ii) aged 45 to 49 years, (iii) aged 50 to 54 years, (iv) aged 55 to 59 years and (v) aged 60 to 64 years who found employment within the last year for which figures are available had been unemployed for (1) under six months, (2) between six and 12 months, (3) between 12 and 24 months and (4) over 24 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Quarterly analyses of claimant unemployed men and women by pre-specified age and duration of unemployment bands are available from the NOMIS database in the Library. The information relates to those whose spell of unemployment is ongoing. For computerised claims NOMIS also gives age and duration information on those leaving the claimant count each month. Information is not held on the labour market status of those who leave claimant unemployment. However, sample surveys suggest that the majority go into employment.

Social Fund Training Courses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women were on an European social fund training course in the Greater London area at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive details of the breakdown of European social fund participants are not available for the Greater London area and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Offshore Health and Safety

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) improvement notices, (b) prohibition notices and (c) prosecutions have been issued or commenced by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division (i) from 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992 and (ii) since 1 April 1992; and what were the results and penalties in each case of a completed prosecution.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1993, c. 818]: I regret that the statistics provided were incomplete. This was due to information from only one of the two Aberdeen operations units being included. The correct answer should read as follows.

	1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	Since 1 April 1992
Number of improvement notices served	Nil	17
Number of prohibition notices served	2	5

Information on completed prosecutions is as follows:

(i) between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1992, a total of 3 companies were convicted and fines of £850, £20,000 and £5,000 respectively were imposed.

(ii) Since 1 April 1992, a total of 6 companies have been convicted and fines of £100,000, £1,000, £30,000, £1,000, £1,000 and £5,000 respectively were imposed. Charges brought against two companies were not proved.

DEFENCE

Hydrographic Office

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for 1993-94 for the Hydrographic Office defence support agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Chief of Fleet Support, acting as the owner of the agency on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence under the terms of the agency's framework document, has set the following key targets for this financial year.

On quality of service, the chief executive is required to continue to ensure that all urgent dangers to navigation are promulgated by radio navigational warnings within 20 hours of receipt of the information. He is also required to improve the state of revision of Admiralty navigational charts and publications in waters of United Kingdom national responsibility so that at 1 April 1994, 80 per cent. will have been revised or reviewed and found to need no revision, within the previous 10 years. The chief executive is also required to achieve his endorsed and funded programme of work as set by the Ministry of Defence Hydrographic Board.

In respect of financial targets, the chief executive is to seek to minimise the level of Exchequer support by achieving 72 per cent. cost recovery.

Defence Postal and Courier Service

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Postal and Courier Service defence support agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The chief executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Service defence support agency has been set the following targets for 1993-94:

1. Improve the percentage of air mail and Ministry of Defence van service items that meet quality of service standards by 0·5 per cent. and 2 per cent. respectively.
2. Introduce an automated financial management and information system by 31 March 1994 to produce all necessary information to support measures of output and unit costs and to meet the accounting requirements of Defence Agencies.
3. Increase the Agency's efficiency by making a 1 per cent. saving against 1992-93 outturn net operating costs (either by imput or output means).
4. Implement phase 1 of the Agency's market testing plan and examine the potential for areas for further study.

Minesweepers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many minesweepers are in service with the Royal Navy; how many other vessels can be called on for minesweeping duties in the event of an emergency; and from what sources.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 30 mine countermeasure vessels in service with the Royal Navy, including nine minesweepers. We do not envisage circumstances in which the Royal Navy could not meet the United Kingdom's requirements for minesweeping from within its own resources.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to the United Kingdom of monitoring the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 23 April 1993, Official Report, column 242.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was (a) the required operational sortie height and (b) the actual recorded height of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton with Frickley, South Yorkshire at approximately 15:12 hrs on 19 May;

(2) what was the required operational sortie height and the actual recorded height of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton with Frickley, South Yorkshire, at approximately 11:04 hrs on 19 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of aircraft were authorised to fly in the low flying area at about the times stated on 19 May, but we have no reason to believe any of those flew below 1,000 ft around the village of Clayton with Frickley.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the boundaries of the military low-flying transit area that covers the towns of Barnsley, Doncaster and Sheffield were last changed; and on what date a radar surveillance was last carried out to ensure that no military jet aircraft infringed the operational low-flying height requirements in that area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No changes have been made to the boundaries of the military low flying transit area that covers the towns of Barnsley, Doncaster and Sheffield since the United Kingdom low-flying system was introduced in 1979. There has been no radar surveillance of low flying in the transit area.

Lance Corporal Gary Fryer

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 264, if he will provide a copy of the police report and inquest reports on the death of Lance Corporal Gary Fryer No. 24792566 to his parents once they become available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes, if Lance Corporal Fryer's parents make such a request.

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British soldiers are part of the British Army of the Rhine; and what was the total cost in the last financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military strength of the British Army of the Rhine is currently about 39,000 and the total operating cost of BAOR in financial year 1992-93 was approximately £1,440 million.

Service Families

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now publish the Gaffney report on service families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans to publish the Gaffney report which was an internal Army document prepared in 1986-87; much of the data it contained will in any case now be out of date.

British Troops (UN Peacekeeping Forces)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the figures for the total number of British troops (a) killed and (b) injured while on duty for the United Nations peacekeeping forces since the end of the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of four United Kingdom service men have died while serving with the United Nations since the end of the Gulf conflict. A further seven have suffered serious or very serious injury over the same period. These figures include death or injury from all sources, not just those resulting from hostile action. Only one death was caused by hostile action.

British Troops (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of British troops (a) killed and (b) injured while on duty in Northern Ireland during 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total number of British troops killed as a result of terrorist action whilst on duty in Northern Ireland was as follows:

	Number
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	8
1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993	5

Information about the number of British troops injured is not available in the form requested. The total number of troops injured in Northern Ireland as a result of terrorist action, both on and off duty, was as follows:

	Number
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	282
1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993	267

Submarines

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number and class of submarines in service in the Royal Navy on 10 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy's submarine fleet on 10 May consisted of three Polaris, one Valiant, five Swiftsure, seven Trafalgar, three Oberon and three Upholder Class submarines giving a total of 22 boats.

Landing Platform Helicopter Vessel

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during the bid for the contract to build the landing platform helicopter vessel, personnel from Kvaerner Govan participated in the bid clarification process.

Mr. Aitken: No. Kvaerner Govan is a sub-contractor to VSEL.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the course of consideration of the landing platform helicopter vessel, the VSEL bid has been comprehensively costed.

Mr. Aitken: The commercial aspects of both bids were assessed against our normal criteria for competitive contracts.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during consideration of the tender for the landing platform helicopter vessel, there was a thorough evaluation of the best and final tenders from VSEL/Kvaerner Govan and Swan Hunter before a report was made to the Controller of the Royal Navy; and how much time was taken on this evaluation before the first report was made on the outcome of the tendering process.

Mr. Aitken: A thorough evaluation was conducted over the period November 1992 to March 1993 culminating in an examination of the best and final offers which were received from the two companies on 22 April. The evaluation was completed in time for me to make the announcement on 11 May.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance was given to both Swan Hunter and VSEL/Kvaerner Govan during clarification, prior to the best and final offer round, on reduced standards which would be acceptable in the bid for the contract to build the landing platform helicopter vessel.

Mr. Aitken: Both tenderers were given the same advice on standards during the clarification process and the best and final offer response had to be fully compliant with these standards.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in considering the tender for the landing platform helicopter vessel, what checks were carried out on the ability of Kvaerner Govan to produce subsystems and the final ship to naval engineering standards.

Mr. Aitken: My officials visited Kvaerner Govan to verify that it was capable of producing subsystems and a ship to the required standards.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in considering the tender for the landing platform helicopter vessel, what checks his Department has carried out concerning the bid submitted by Kvaerner Govan to VSEL and the specification placed on Kvaerner Govan by VSEL.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's contract is with VSEL and requires it to ensure that the work meets the required specifications.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the bids for the landing platform helicopter vessel tendered by both Swan Hunter and VSEL/Kvaerner Govan included comprehensive drawings and other elements required of a technical data package.

Mr. Aitken: Both tenderers provided the required technical disclosure.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what options from the first round bid for the landing platform helicopter vessel were taken up from both VSEL/Kvaerner Govan and Swan Hunter in the best and final offer round.

Mr. Aitken: Costed options for certain equipments and facilities were taken up. The bids were compared on an equal basis.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there was a significant price gap between the first bids submitted for the landing platform helicopter vessel last autumn from Swan Hunter and VSEL.

Mr. Aitken: Yes. Details of the bids are commercially confidential, but will be provided to the National Audit Office.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if, during consideration of the tender for the landing platform helicopter vessel, all elements of the tenders from VSEL/Kvaerner Govan and Swan Hunter were assessed for compliance with Ministry of Defence requirements; and if either bidder submitted a global undertaking of compliance;

(2) if the tenders from both VSEL/Kvaerner Govan and Swan Hunter for the landing platform helicopter vessel specifically state that pipework, machinery and electrical systems will be completed to the applicable naval engineering standards.

Mr. Aitken: Both bids were assessed for compliance and our contract with VSEL fully meets our requirements.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further documentation is required from VSEL before a contract to build the landing platform helicopter vessel can be signed; and when his Department expects the contract to be signed.

Mr. Aitken: The contract was placed on 11 May 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the tenders from both VSEL/Kvaerner and Swan Hunter for the landing platform helicopter vessel included all the changes required by his Department as a result of the first bidding round; and if each tender included the additional requirements specified by his Department during the best and final offer.

Mr. Aitken: Both tenders offered a ship to meet the same requirements.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the anticipated costs of Royal Navy overseeing teams which will have to be located at Kvaerner Govan to ensure compliance during the building of the landing platform helicopter vessel.

Mr. Aitken: Resident naval overseers will be employed on this task, augmented as necessary. There will be no net increase in cost.

VSEL (Submarine Contracts)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of advance payments from his Department to VSEL for submarine contracts.

Mr. Aitken: Payments to VSEL under submarine contracts are made in arrears on the achievement of agreed milestones.

Royal Navy (Engineering)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what comparative assessment he has made of the lengths and cost of practical applications training of engineer officers for the Royal Navy if the engineering academic studies are concentrated on a civilian university.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I announced proposals on 25 May about the future of royal naval engineer officer training. These proposals are now the subject of consultation. Practical application training course lengths and the costs involved in running them will not be affected by these proposals although there will be a relocation cost which has been taken into account.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the advantages of educating and training engineer officer undergraduates for the Royal Navy in an establishment located close to a major naval base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As was set out in the consultation document that I placed yesterday in the Library of the House, the education and training of royal naval engineer officer undergraduates is presently undertaken by a variety of methods, in-service and by universities. There is little interaction between engineer officers reading for degrees or undertaking application training courses, and a major naval base. Ready access to the sea is, of course, an important factor in their training as naval officers.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of engineer officers in the Royal Navy do not possess an engineering degree.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately 30 per cent. of engineer officers do not possess an engineering degree.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times he has visited the Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon, Plymouth, in the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. I last visited the Royal Naval Engineering college at Manadon on 14 November 1991.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made regarding the costs and feasibility of transferring engineering training equipment and installations from the Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon, Plymouth, to other establishments in the event of a decision to close the college at Manadon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The proposals that I announced on 25 May were based on studies which inter alia assessed the practicalities of transferring equipment from Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon in the event of a decision to relocate application training. Estimated costs involved would be approximately £9,000,000 and this includes costs relating to the additional building requirements at the receiving establishments.

Royal Navy (BA Degrees)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the benefits of having an in-service Bachelor of Arts degree specifically tailored for the Royal Navy's needs

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Bachelor of Arts degree in maritime defence, management and technology was introduced in 1990 to make better use of the Royal Navy's degree training facilities at the Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon and the Royal Naval college, Greenwich. The course allows for suitably qualified officers who do not undertake degree study at civilian university to develop their educational, intellectual and personnel potential in vocationally relevant fields.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what has been the cost of running the Royal Navy's in-service BA degree for each of the last three years;

(2) what has been the cost of setting up the Royal Navy's BA degree in maritime defence technology.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy's BA degree in maritime defence, management and technology is conducted at Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon with support from Britannia Royal Naval college, Dartmouth and Royal Naval college, Greenwich. The costs involved are minimal and are not readily identifiable separately.

EH101 Helicopters

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the total number of EH101 Merlin anti-submarine warfare helicopters required to provide each of the Royal Navy's aircraft carriers with sufficient aircraft; and what plans he has to order a second batch of EH101s.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our policy to discuss numbers of aircraft deployed on individual ships. The 44 Merlin EH101 anti-submarine warfare helicopters ordered in 1991 will enable us to set up training squadrons and introduce the first squadrons of aircraft into service with type 23 frigates and one carrier. No decision has yet been taken on the size or timing of a second order.

Royal Military College of Science

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times he has visited the Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham, in the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the past 12 months, I have visited the college twice.

Mines in the Next Century Project

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the mines in the next century project and United Kingdom participation in it.

Mr. Aitken: Mines in the next century—MINX—is the name given to the project to study the replacement for the United Kingdom's existing anti-tank mine from the year 2001. We are currently considering the options for this.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the efficiency of the contingency plan for the introduction of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 25 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the efficiency of the contingency plan for the introduction of Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

Firstly, I should explain that DLA was launched in February 1992 with an extensive publicity campaign. As part of this campaign we wrote to all existing Mobility Allowance (MobA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) recipients (approximately 1 million customers). Changes in the benefit were explained and an invitation extended, where appropriate, for them to claim extra money under the new DLA rules. In the meantime other external take-up campaigns were also being run.

It had been expected that the initial launch of the new benefit would generate large numbers of claims in the months surrounding its introduction. Whilst planning had taken place for an increase in benefit claims, the success of the advertising campaign and the various take-up campaigns resulted in a much larger number of claims being attracted in the early stages than had been expected. There was also a huge increase in the number of claims to AA during the same period.

This sudden surge of claims occurred as staff were adjusting to the new benefit processes and procedures. It meant that a backlog of cases built up in the weeks following the introduction of DLA.

A recovery plan was quickly instigated. This consisted of several facets and included:

The setting up of a seniour management task force.

An increase in the number of staff, devoted to handling claims, by over 800. This represented an increase of approximately 25 per cent.

The use of overtime which equated to a further 300 staff.

The establishment and equipping of four remote processing units to increase output.

The conducting of a detailed review of procedures and organisation to speed up the process wherever possible.

As a result of these measures the throughput of claims was increased. The first phase of the recovery programme was successfully completed by the end of October 1992. The number of outstanding DLA and top-up claims had been considerably reduced from a peak of nearly 250,000 at the end of June to less than 115,000 by the end of October. During the same period outstanding AA claims had also been reduced significantly from over 150,000 to just over 52,000.

Further reductions in the number of claims on hand have been made and at the end of April 1993 the number of outstanding DLA (including top-ups) and AA new claims was 35,000 and 34,000 respectively. This represents less than four weeks intake of work i.e. less than the target clearance time for both benefits.

The majority of DLA new claims received since January 1993 have been cleared within their primary target. For the month of April 1993, 75 per cent. of DLA new claims were cleared within 30 days against the Secretary of State (SoS) primary target (65 per cent. in 30 days) and 91 per cent. were cleared in 55 days against the SoS secondary target (85 per cent. in 55 days).

The results outlined clearly illustrate the overall effectiveness of the measures undertaken. The Benefits Agency will continue to strive to produce a thoroughly efficient service for all customers of DLA and associated benefits.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Pensions (Post Office)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many senior citizens used the Post Office to receive their pensions each year since 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The payment of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 25 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many senior citizens used the Post Office to receive their pensions each year since 1990.

Pensioners receiving their pensions through the Post Office are paid by order book. The number of Retirement Pension customers paid by order book for each year are as follows:

	Number
February 1990	7,720,000
May 1991	7,750,000
April 1992	7,710,000
May 1993	7,570,000

Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many senior citizens receive income support in (a) Lancashire, (b) the north-west and (c) Great Britain.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 25 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking how many senior citizens receive Income Support in (a) Lancashire, (b) the North West and (c) Great Britain.

The information is not available in the form you have requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. This is because statistics that reflect the number of senior citizens (that is, those who have reached retirement age) in receipt of Income Support, either nationally or by region are not routinely collected.

However, I am able to tell you that there are 1,570,805 Income Support pensioners in Great Britain as a whole. An Income Support pensioner is defined as a customer aged 60 or over. The source of this information is the Income Support Mangagement Information Statistics.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the target and the achieved accuracy rates for each social security benefit for each of the last five years;

(2) how many people made a claim for each social security benefit for each of the last five years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Frank Field, dated 26 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for details of the target and achieved accuracy rates for each social security benefit for each of the last five years; and how many people made a claim for each social security benefit for each of the last five years.

I have attached a list of targets and achievement at Annex A. At Annex B I attach a list of benefits and the number of claims made. I should point out that a number of these claims will have been made by the same person.

I hope you will find this information helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also appear in the Library.

Income Maintenance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the overall cost of provisions for income maintenance in Wales; and what are the total amounts of expenditure, or revenue forgone, on (a) benefits, (b) administering benefits, (c) student grants, (d) statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay, (e) income tax allowances, (f) income tax reliefs and (g) the total value of contracted-out rebates and two per cent. incentives in respect of personal pensions and contracted-out schemes.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to provide a reply in the precise form requested as some of the income maintenance information is not collected or maintained separately for Wales. The latest information available is as follows.

(i) Expenditure on Income Support in Wales in 1989-90 was £442 million.[1]

(ii) Expenditure on Housing Benefit in Wales in 1992-93 was £380 million.[2]

(iii) Estimated cost of administration of all social security benefits in Wales for 1992-93 is £55·3 million.

(iv) Estimated cost of income tax allowances on personal taxation in Wales for 1990-91 is £6,250 million.

(v) Estimated cost of tax relief on earnings and investments (excluding MIRAS) in Wales for 1990-91 is £485 million.

(vi) Expenditure on mandatory and discretionary student grants awarded by local authorities in Wales to students normally resident in their area in 1990-91 was £109 million.

Additional statistical information for Wales can be found in 'Welsh Economic Trends, No. 13', published by the Welsh Office in 1992, a copy of which is in the Library.

Children in Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all additional benefits which are potentially available to allow parents (a) entitled and (b) not entitled to income support to visit children who are detained in hospital (i) in the short term and (ii) in the long term; if he will describe the eligibility criteria for each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Those entitled to income support may be able to receive a community care grant or a budgeting loan from the social fund for expenses to visit someone who is in hospital. Payments are discretionary but are normally given high priority. Those not in receipt of income support will normally be better placed to meet these costs because they will have higher levels of income. Even so, a crisis loan from the social fund may be payable if the payment is the only way to prevent serious damage or risk to the health or safety of the applicant. Payments from the social fund can be made in one lump sum or at regular intervals if the visits are to continue for some time.

Pension Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentages of respondents opted for automated credit transfer and post office order book payment in each group of 8,000 recipients applying for pension payments involved in the test marketing of forms which took place in March of this year;

(2) what was the total cost of the test marketing of revised forms for retirement pension payments which were issued to 24,000 recipients in March this year;

(3) when a decision will be taken on revised forms giving those eligible for the state retirement pension a choice of payment method; and when such forms will be introduced.

Miss Widdecombe: Retirement pension claim forms are issued four months before potential entitlement begins and, so far, only a minority of the piloted claim forms have been returned. It is not possible to draw any statistically valid conclusions at this stage.

Decisions on any revision of the current claim form, including when any resultant new form might be introduced, will not be made until after the results of the trial are known.

The cost of the test is estimated to be around £22,000.

Quarry House

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 569, what part of the £55·5 million of the cost of building Quarry house was spent on landscaping.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to put a precise figure on the landscaping costs because of the nature of the contract with the builders.

Earnings and Expenses

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reduce burdens on business caused by the different definitions of earnings and expenses used for national insurance and tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley: I have today announced the setting up of a working group to identify the options for reducing the administrative difficulties for business caused by differences in the rules for national insurance and income tax. The membership of the working group will include representatives of business as well as officials from my Department and the Inland Revenue. They will be encouraged to take a fresh look at the problems and will come forward with recommendations.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will benefit from the 100 per cent. rebates under the council tax.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that in 1993-94 some 3·19 million households will receive 100 per cent. rebates under council tax benefit, out of a total council tax benefit caseload of 5·3 million.

Source: Figures rounded to the nearest 5,000 and based on actual council tax levels and data drawn from the 1989-90-91 Family Expenditure Surveys modelled at 1993-94 prices and benefit levels.

Rent Deposits

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many grants for rent deposits under the single payments system were not returned by landlords in the three years prior to its replacement by the social fund; and what was the annual cost of the non-returned deposits.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many grants for rent deposits were made under the single payments system in the three years prior to its replacement by the social fund; what was the annual cost; and what were unit costs as a proportion of the total single payment spending.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table.

Year	Estimated expenditure (£ million)	Estimated claims (Thousands)[1]	Single payment expenditure (£ million)
1985-86	3	30,000	335
1986-87	7	49,000	330
1987-88	10	[2]—	294

[1] To the nearest thousand.
[2] Unavailable.

The table indicates that deposits accounted for an estimated 2·1 per cent. of the total single payment expenditure over this period.

Benefits (Automated Credit Transfer)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of public expenditure by (a) his Department and (b) the Benefits Agency to encourage benefit claimants to have their benefits paid by automated credit transfer.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms Anderson) on 26 April at columns 313-14.

Information on methods of payment of social security benefits, including ACT, is included in a number of leaflets issued by the Benefits Agency.

Recently, the Benefits Agency piloted three versions of the retirement pension claim form. The cost of this trial was estimated to be around £22,000.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each of the organisations which have written to him on the subject of automated credit transfer and the implications for the viability of sub post offices; and if he will indicate which have been (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable.

Miss Widdecombe: We have recently received a substantial number of representations about automated credit transfer, including letters from a wide variety of organisations, from right hon. and hon. Members and from a number of individuals, arguing in favour of the continuing availability of post offices for the payment of benefits. We have also received correspondence in favour of ACT being available for a greater range of benefits.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to strengthen the role of employees in the administration of occupational pension scheme funds;

(2) if he will bring forward proposals to prohibit employers from having a controlling decision on (a) how occupational pension funds are used, (b) what the pension levels should be and (c) the use of these funds to pay off company debts.

Miss Widdecombe: The rights and interests of scheme members, pensioners and employers in occupational pension scheme are among the issues being considered by the Pension Law Review Committee. The committee was established, in June last year under the chairmanship of Professor Goode QC, to review the whole framework of law and regulation within which occupational pension schemes operate. It would be premature for the Government to comment on possible changes before the committee reports at the end of September.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to improve the position of those whose occupational pension rights have been lessened by periods of unemployment; and what age group he estimates is most affected.

Miss Widdecombe: Members of occupational pension schemes who become unemployed are entitled to a preserved pension which is revalued in line with rises in prices of up to 5 per cent. a year until they reach the scheme's normal retirement age. On starting work again they can either leave their preserved pension where it is, or transfer their rights into their new employer's pension scheme or into a personal pension. Information on the ages of those involved is not available. We have no plans to change these provisions.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to improve the position of those whose occupational pensions are abated because they left early.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 9 November 1992 at column 563.

WALES

Trawsfynydd

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what weight of plutonium has been created in the Trawsfynydd nuclear plant since it opened; and what information his Department has received from Nuclear Electric and its predecessor company in regard to movements of plutonium from the plant.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1986-87, estimates of the plutonium contained in the reactor discharges at Trawsfynydd power station have been published as part of the annual plutonium figures. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. Estimates for earlier years could be produced only at disproportionate cost. For the information supplied by operators on shipments, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 3 December 1992, Official Report, column 346.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give manufacturing output figures for Wales in 1976, 1981, 1986, 1991 and 1992 in constant prices, the percentage change from 1976 to 1992 and taking 1976 as 100, the United Kingdom manufacturing output change figures for the same intervening years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the following table.

Index of manufacturing output, annual averages

	1985 = 100		Percentage change since 1976
	Wales	United Kingdom	Wales	United Kingdom
1976	100·7	103·5	0·0	0·0
1981	93·0	91·0	−7·6	−12·1
1986	104·5	101·3	3·8	−2·1
1991	125·7	112·2	24·8	8·4
1992	127·2	111·4	26·3	7·6

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the 1993-94 council tax for Wales is to be paid for by (a) single-person households, (b) two-person households and (c) three or more person households.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information required is not held centrally.

River Ebbw

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the levels of chemical pollution in the River Ebbw.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority, which regularly monitors the river on a routine basis. I am advised by the authority that the results of the monitoring show water quality to be generally good and improving.

Pharmacies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to pay professional allowances to pharmacists dispensing over 2,000 scripts per month.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 20 May at column 314.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policies he has adopted to assist local pharmacies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local pharmacies may be eligible for a range of assistance to retail businesses which is provided through the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme, through training and enterprise councils, and through local enterprise agencies. Pharmacies in commercial improvement areas or commercial renewal areas may also qualify for assistance for commercial building improvement works under the Welsh Office's urban programme. For those pharmacies who are contracted to provide pharmaceutical services to the NHS, the arrangements for determining their remuneration are intended to give pharmacists a fair return for the level and quality of the services they provide. The essential small pharmacies scheme gives additional payments to improve the financial viability of small isolated pharmacies which provide essential NHS dispensing services to patients.

Managing in the 90s

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many firms in Clwyd have been helped by the organisation, Managing in the 90s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Clwyd-based companies, in common with their counterparts throughout the country, have benefited in a variety of ways from this extensive management best-practice awareness programme. Initially focusing on four areas of industrial performance—design, production, purchasing and quality—it has recently been extended to include marketing and innovation.

The programme reaches its audience through a range of media—publications, videos and events. I understand that literature and invitations to events are regularly dispatched to some 100 companies in the Clwyd area.

The programme was launched in Wales in June 1989 with two successful management action briefings, one of which was held at British Aerospace, Broughton, in Clwyd which attracted a capacity audience of predominantly local industrialists.

The programme acts as an umbrella and inspiration behind a wide range of other activities such as Newtech's Transforum with membership in excess of 50 which exists to help Clwyd and Gwynedd companies take advantage of technology transfer opportunities.

Late last year 24 companies attended a "Competing With the Best in Manufacturing" seminar in Holywell arranged under the M90's programme.

The flagship of the programme, the strategy roadshow, has visited Clwyd twice. It was at Deeside industrial estate for a week in September 1991 and more recently in February this year at British Aerospace, Broughton where it attracted 299 visitors over five days from 149 organisations.

Support for Products under Research

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will name the companies in Clwyd that have received financial assistance from the scheme, support for products under research; what was the amount of each award; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: SPUR is a valuable scheme designed to enable small and medium size companies to develop new products and processes which are technologically advanced.

In Wales, some 20 companies have been supported under the scheme so far. These include three companies located in Clwyd which have collectively received offers of assistance totalling £360,000.

These companies are:

Breger Gibson Ltd.	– offered up to £150,000
Depac Glideflare Ltd.	– offered up to £119,100
Sutures Ltd.	– offered up to £90,000

Construction Industry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the value of construction industry new orders according to sector at constant 1985 prices in Wales in each year from 1980 indicating the values of (a) total new orders, (b) housing new orders, (c) construction and industry new orders and (d) public infrastructure new orders.

Mr. David Hunt: Constant price data are available only for years until 1991 and the available information is given in the following tables.

Education (Special Needs)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list on an annual basis the number of times the procedures under section 14 of the Education Act 1981 have been used, indicating the local education authorities involved, the special schools proposed for closure, the ones that were closed and the alternative provision made for them.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information is not available in the form requested. However, from 1988, the special schools subject to section 14 procedures, together with the date of my right hon. Friend's decision, are shown in the following list. Prior to 1988, the number of special schools in Wales by county and by year are shown in the relevant volume of "Statistics of Education in Wales".

County and School Proposal	Decision

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice has been issued directly or through the Curriculum Council for Wales, School Examinations and Assessment Council and Her Majesty's inspectorate in Wales about the teaching or modifying of the national curriculum for emotionally and behaviourally disturbed children.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has issued circulars to local education authorities and schools in Wales advising on the provision to be made for children with special educational needs within the national curriculum including, if necessary, the adaptation, modification or disapplication of national curriculum requirements. The Curriculum Council for Wales has issued non-statutory guidance for teachers on how to provide for pupils with special educational needs and the Schools Examinations and Assessment Council has produced and distributed to all schools in Wales teacher guidance material on the assessment of pupils with special educational needs. Pupils with special educational needs include those with emotional and behavioural problems.

Construction Industry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the value of construction output according to sector at constant 1985 prices within Wales for each year since 1980 indicating (a) the total amount, (b) money allocated to housing, (c) money allocated to commercial and industrial work and (d) money allocated to public infrastructure.

Institute of Welsh Affairs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from the Institute of Welsh Affairs over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the total gross capital expenditure on housing by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations for each year from 1979-80, including estimated expenditure up to 1994-95; and if he will indicate the total spent on social housing (i) in cash terms and (ii) at constant 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on gross capital expenditure on housing is given in the following table. For 1994-95, local authorities and Housing for Wales will make firm expenditure plans in the light of the resources which will be announced later this year.

The total capital amount spent, by local authorities and housing associations, on social housing for the period 1979-80 to 1993-94 is estimated at £2,800 million in cash terms, and £3,600 million at constant 1991-92 prices. The local authority element includes Housing Revenue Account capital expenditure for each year and low cost home ownership expenditure for the period 1981-82 to 1991-92. Information on low cost home ownership is not available separately for the other years.

Mortgage Assistance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has of the number of households assisted through mortgage rescue schemes in Wales; and if he will indicate the percentage of mortgage-holding households that have benefited from such schemes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tourists from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) abroad visited each county in Wales in each year since 1987.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information available for tourist visits to Wales is given in the following table:

Visitors to Wales[1]

	Overseas visitors (thousands)			Domestic visitors (millions)
	North Wales	Mid Wales	South Wales	North Wales	Mid Wales	South Wales

South Wales: Dyfed (except the Ceredigion district), Mid, South and West Glamorgan, Gwent and part of the Brecknock district of Powys.

House Prices

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information on the number of households with mortgages in Wales that have been affected by negative equity; and if he will express the figure (a) as a percentage of all households and (b) as a percentage of mortgage-holding households.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Employment and Training Schemes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local employment and training systems schemes currently in action in Wales; and what encouragement is given by his Department to the formation of such schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: Local schemes for the benefit of the community are supported under the training for work and community action programmes (or systems) in Wales. I encourage such schemes especially where they provide opportunities for training and practising skills, but lists of schemes are not held centrally.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received for each of the last 10 years and for each local authority in Wales complaining about planning decisions that have been taken locally in contravention of county structure plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not recorded centrally and such of it as might be available could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

House Building

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures on actual and projected new dwelling starts according to tenure in Wales in each year from 1985 to 1995 indicating (a) total dwellings, (b) local authority dwellings, (c) housing association, (d) total social housing dwellings and (e) private sector dwelings.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures on actual new dwellings started, analysed by expected tenure, are published in the annual Welsh Housing Statistics volume, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Projections are not available.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been (a) created and (b) safeguarded in Wales by regional selective assistance in areas defined by the Industry Act 1972, and amended in 1984, since its implementation.

Mr. David Hunt: Information about employment created or safeguarded by regional selective assistance since its implementation is not available centrally. However information about payments of RSA and employment created or safeguarded on cumulative offers accepted since 1 April 1982 is published in the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual report. Further information is also published in the Welsh Office departmental report. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Brecon Beacons

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to secure the financial position of Brecon Beacons national park authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I asked the four county councils concerned to clarify their position with regard to the funding in 1993-94 of the Brecon Beacons national park and I am presently considering the response from the county solicitor of Powys county council, who has replied on behalf of all the councils. It would be inappropriate to comment further at this time.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number employed in local authorities at the present time, and the estimated figure of employment for the proposed unitary authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available estimate of the total number employed in local authorities in Wales is 122,513 full-time equivalents. This is a provisional figure, as at December 1992, provided by the Local Government Management Board.

It will be for unitary authorities to decide their own management structures and staffing levels. The study of transitional costs by Touche Ross suggested that, for 23 authorities, the change in staff numbers might range from a net decrease of 490 to a net increase of 623.

Public Libraries

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to support and promote public libraries in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The statutory duty to provide a comprehensive public library service rests with the library authorities. The Department's activities in relation to public libraries conform with the responsibilities defined in the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

Performing Arts

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to support and promote the performing arts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A number of Welsh Office programmes contribute to the support and promotion of the performing arts in Wales, but this is principally a matter for the Welsh Arts Council which is funded by the Department of National Heritage through the Arts Council of Great Britain. Responsibility for the Welsh Arts Council will transfer to the Secretary of State from 1 April 1994.

Police Services

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take the necessary steps to arrange for the prefix "Royal" to be added to each of the police services in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of abattoirs in Wales and their combined average throughput in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 1991 and (e) 1992; and what are the most recent figures available.

Mr. David Hunt: Annual statistics derived from the survey of Welsh slaughterhouses are given in the following table. (Comparable figures are not available for the years 1970 and 1980—details for 1985 are therefore included):

Year	Number of abattoirs open[1]	Average throughput per abattoir (LUs)[2]
1985	72	5,454
1990	57	8,824
1991	55	9,964
1992	47	8,171

The most recent figures available show that 41 abattoirs in Wales are currently licensed to operate under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

[1] Open at any time during the year.

[2] 1 LU (livestock unit) = One adult cattle/calf or seven sheep or three pigs.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average (a) local authority expenditure and (b) Government grant to local authorities per head of population, in Wales for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest information available is as follows:

	Revenue expenditure[1]	Government grant[2]
£/head[3]
1990-91	773	486
1991-92[4]	869	627
1992-93[5]	930	655

[1] Includes expenditure required to be financed from revenue in the current year and the cost of financing capital expenditure (capital charges) including the debt repayments and interest payable on loans raised to finance past capital expenditure and direct revenue contributions towards capital expenditure in the current year.

[2] Comprises Revenue Support Grant, specific and supplementary grants within Aggregate external Finance, Community Charge Benefit Grant, Transitional Relief/Community Charge Reduction Scheme Grants and Community Charge Grant (1991-92).

[3] Based on Office of Population Censuses and Surveys mid-year estimates.

[4] Revised estimates.

[5] Budgets.

Integrated Administration and Control Systems

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of IACS forms issued had been returned by 15 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of 18,447 farmers in Wales had submitted their IACS application forms by the deadline of 15 May 1993. This accounts for 47 per cent. of the 40,000 forms which were issued although it was expected that around 18,000 would be returned.

The IACS literature package was sent to all known farmers in Wales (including sheep farmers who did not need to return a form this year).

Cattle Identification

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what concessions farmers will receive if they fail to receive their cattle identification documents within the correct time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Producers who submit claims for premium (on forms BEEF 5 or 5A) and who have not received the appropriate CIDs by the end of the retention period should contact their divisional office immediately. Producers who have submitted applications for CIDs (on form BEEF 2) who have not received their documents within 21 days of submitting an application should follow the advice on the application form and contact their divisional office to explain their position. In both instances, divisional offices will seek to release the documents in time for marketing to proceed or premium to be claimed as appropriate.

Banw and Llanerfyl Primary School

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of the Banw and Llanerfyl primary school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have today indicated to the chairman of the governing body of Ysgol Gynradd Llanerfyl and to Powys county council that I am minded to approve the school's application for grant-maintained status subject to the date of implementation being amended to 1 September 1993.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people received IVF treatment in each of the last five years in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: IVF treatment under the national health service is available through the fertility clinic at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff. This was opened in May 1988 and saw its first patients in November 1988, but did not become fully operational until 1990.

Information about the number of treatments given in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1988	8
1989	69
1990	91
1991	153
1992	138

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Agency Letters

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will place in the Library copies of the recommendations submitted by (a) the Editor of the Official Report, (b) the Principal Clerk of the Table Office and (c) other sources in connection with the resolution agreed by the Administration Committee on publication of agency chief executives' letters and accompanying tables.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The terms of the Administration Committee's approval of arrangements for the publication of agency chief executive's letters in the Official Report are set out in the Committee's Minutes of Proceedings for 8 July 1992, HC 368-i to iv. It is not the practice of the Administration Committee to deposit in the Library papers which have not been reported to the House.

Telephone Bills

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what were the quarterly telephone bills for the Palace of Westminster, including outbuildings, for each of the last 10 years; what use has been made of Mercury Communications through least-cost routing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin [holding answer 17 May 1993]: It is not possible to provide details of quarterly telecommunications bills for the Palace of Westminster for the past 10 years. However, the annual bill for telephone messages for the last seven years is as follows:

1987	471,000
1988	552,000
1989	561,000
1990	570,000
1991	690,000
1992	599,000

New technology installed in the Palace of Westminster telecommunications exchange in the summer of 1992 included a "least-cost routing" facility. At the same time, 125 of the outgoing lines of the exchange were converted to the Mercury network. These changes allow the automatic selection of the cheapest service for each outgoing message. Since October 1992, approximately 1·1 million calls lasting more than 20,000 hours have been carried on Mercury lines.

EDUCATION

Teacher Education

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the advice received, and all correspondence, from Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools on the subject of teacher education and school-based teacher training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Education (Schools) Act 1992, the question of publication is entirely a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools. The Department for Education and Science was responsible for publishing Her Majesty's inspectorate's reports prepared before September 1992. It published a number of reports on teacher education, including one on school-based initial teacher training in England and Wales which was given wide distribution in January 1992.

Liverpool City Technology College

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of acquiring land to be used as the Liverpool city technology college.

Mr. Forth: A site in Liverpool for possible use as a city technology college was acquired by the CTC Trust in February 1989 for £185,000 and sold in two parts in December 1990 and August 1991 for a total of £669,000.

Higher Education Student Charter

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of the non-consultative version of the higher education student charter were printed before the publication on Friday 21 May of the consultative version; what was the cost of printing them; what was the total number of administrative hours spent preparing them; when they will be pulped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Three and a half million copies of the charter for higher education were printed at a cost of £152,000. All copies have been pulped. Since my right hon. Friend announced our intention to publish further and higher education charters on 19 June 1992, the time of approximately one full-time equivalent offical has been devoted to the higher education charter initiative. The printing arrangements had to be made well in advance of the target date for publication given the large number of copies required. In the event, following further representations, my right hon. Friend agreed that wider formal consultations should be undertaken in particular to allow individual universities to have the opportunity to comment through the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals.

EMPLOYMENT

Asbestos

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress she has made towards banning all grades of asbestos; what discussions she has had at an EC level on this matter; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The importation, supply and use of the two types of asbestos most commonly associated with disease—crocidolite (blue asbestos) and amosite (brown asbestos)—has been prohibited in the United Kingdom since 1986, although they have not been imported since 1972 and 1980 respectively. Since 1 January 1993, three further types of asbestos have been prohibited though these were not used commercially in the United Kingdom.

Chrysotile (white asbestos) is now the only type of asbestos allowed into the United Kingdom. Imports have dropped significantly in recent years and are now less than 10,000 tonnes annually. Negotiations are currently in progress on a European Community draft directive to ban chrysotile but with exemptions for certain uses. The Government are keen to avoid this resulting in the replacement chrysotile with substitutes which may be less safe, and support the proposed directive provided that exemptions are based on the relative risks of chrysotile and substitute materials in any particular application.

Ports (Accidents)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatal accidents have taken place in the United Kingdom ports industry since July 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of fatal accidents occurring in docks and harbours in Great Britain between 1 July 1989 and 31 March 1992 are given in the table. Statistics for 1992-93 are not yet available. Accident statistics for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Fatal accidents[1] in docks and harbours[2] as reported to the Health and Safety Executive's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates—1 July 1989 to 1991-92[4]

Year	Fatalities
1 July 1989 to 31 March 1990	7
1990-91[3]	2
1991-92[4,3]	6
Total	15

[1] Includes accidents to employees (including trainees), self employed persons and members of the public injured as a result of someone else's work activity notified under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).
[2] As defined by Standard Industrial Classification Class 74 and actify heading 7630.
[3] Year commencing 1 April.
[4] Provisional.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many industrial accidents have taken place in United Kingdom port activities since July 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of non-fatal injuries occurring in docks and harbours in Great Britain between 1 July 1989 and 31 March 1992 are given in the table. Statistics for 1992-93 are not yet available. Accident statistics for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Injuries[1] in docks and harbours[2] as reported to the health and safety executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates 1 July 1989 to 1991-92[6]

	Severity of injury		Total
	Major[4]	Over three days[5]
1989-90[7]	80	406	486
1990-91[3]	113	498	611
1991-92[6,3]	88	469	557
Total	281	1,373	1,654

[1] Includes injuries to employees (including trainees), self employed persons and members of the public injured as a result of someone else's work activity notified under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).
[2] As defined by Standard Industrial Classification Class 74 and activity heading 7630.
[3] Year commending 1st April.
[4] As defined under RIDDOR but chiefly amputations, serious fractures and any other injury requiring hospitalisation for 24 hours.
[5] Any injury that results in an absence from normal work for more than three days.
[6] Provisional.
[7] 1 July 1989 to 31 March 1990.

Dock Workers (Compensation)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the inquiry commissioned from MDS-Transmodal by the Departments of Transport and Employment in 1991 into the cost to public funds of the compensation payments paid to former registered dock workers under the Dock Work Act 1989 has been completed; and if it will be published.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1991, the Departments of Employment and Transport commissioned MDS-Transmodal and Pieda plc to undertake a study into the effects on the port industry of the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

A report on the study is being prepared for publication. It is anticipated that the report will be published this year, and I will ensure that copies of the report are placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sex Discrimination

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is taking to lessen inequalities between women's and men's pay.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1992, women's average hourly earnings—excluding overtime—were 79·2 per cent. of men's, the highest level ever, and the fifth consecutive year in which the differential between men's and women's pay had narrowed.

The pursuit of sound economic policies resulting in high productivity and low inflation have established the appropriate conditions for the recent success in further narrowing the differential between women's and men's pay. Further progress in this area will depend in part on sustaining and improving on these economic gains.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is taking to combat sex discrimination in the workplace.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Equal Pay Act 1970 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, both as amended, make discrimination on grounds of sex in contractual and non-contractual employment matters unlawful. The Department publishes and distributes widely explanatory guides to the legislation.

The Department also funds the Equal Opportunities Commission, which has a statutory duty to work towards the elimination of discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity between women and men.

Sexual Harassment

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is taking to combat sexual harassment in the workplace.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government abhor sexual harassment as a particularly nasty form of sex discrimination which can have unacceptable repercussions in the workplace.

It is well established in law that in certain circumstances sexual harassment can amount to sex discrimination, contrary to the provisions of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

The Department has published two booklets explaining to employers and employees how to combat sexual harassment at work. Both booklets have been widely distributed throughout industry.

The Government have also brought forward an amendment to the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill which will give industrial tribunals a discretionary power to protect those involved in sexual harassment cases from intrusive or offensive reporting of their cases.

Personal Contracts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration she has given to the implications of the recent Court of Appeal ruling that companies which grant pay rises only to employees accepting personal contracts are in contravention of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 for employment practices in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have given careful consideration to the recent Court of Appeal decisions on this issue. As a result of these judgments, the law on action short of dismissal, which is now contained in section 146 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, has been left in a state of some confusion. Section 146 was never intended to interfere in an employer's freedom to determine negotiating arrangements that best suit his business needs.

In order to clarify the law on action short of dismissal, we have therefore introduced an amendment to the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, which completed its stages in another place on Monday 24 May. This provision makes it clear that action taken by an employer for the purpose of changing his negotiating arrangements is not action taken against an individual within the scope of section 146.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated amount to be spent in 1993-94 in rent and other associated costs for the offices of her Department in Caxton house, Tothill street, London.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimated expenditure by the Department for rent and other associated accommodation costs in Caxton house, Tothill street in 1993-94 is £12·75 million made up as follows:

	£ million
Rent paid to Property Holdings (including VAT)	8·88
Rates	2·91
Maintenance costs	0·96

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. T. Barber

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action his Department has taken in response to the representations made to him about the case of Mr. T. Barber of 6 Bennett rise, Huncote, Leicestershire, regarding his work as a bailiff at Leicester county court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mortgaged Properties (Repossession)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what were the main conclusions of his Department's review of county court rules concerning general possession procedures in relation to mortgaged properties.

Mr. John Taylor: The main conclusions of the review of the handling of mortgage possession cases were that the court needed to be provided with more information about the basis of the claim and the defendant's circumstances. New rules and forms that achieve these aims are currently being drafted.

Judiciary (Training)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of training the judiciary and the magistracy in the procedures to be adopted under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Before the Criminal Justice Act 1991 came into force in October 1992, all judges of the Crown court and all magistrates were trained in its requirements. Judges and recorders attended sentencing conferences on their own circuits and special sessions dedicated to studying the Act's provisions were incorporated in the standard refresher and induction courses run centrally by the Judicial Studies Board. Written material was also issued. In addition, a training package, funded by the Home Office, was provided for justices' clerks to enable them to train justices of the peace. It is not possible to quantify the cost in detail because of the local nature of most of the training, but a very rough estimate would be approximately £250,000.

Trainee Lawyers (Grants)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations his Department has received in the last 12 months regarding discretionary grants made by local authorities to trainee lawyers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has received four representations from individual students, as well as representations from the Law Society, and from the chairman of the Trainee Solicitors Group.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he is taking to encourage (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minority groups to pursue careers in the legal profession.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Although he has no direct responsibilities in this field, the Lord Chancellor is concerned to ensure equality of opportunity between all persons intending to be employed in the provision of legal services. Section 64 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 extends the provisions of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and the Race Relations Act 1976 to the Bar in England and Wales. For those who seek judicial office, the Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint those best qualified, regardless of gender, ethnic origin, political affiliation or religion. Without prejudice to this overriding principle, the Lord Chancellor has stressed publicly, and will continue to do so, that he would like more women and those of ethnic origin who are suitably qualified to be appointed to the judiciary.

The Government recognised the importance of encouraging equality of opportunity when it established the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct, which is independent of the Government. The Act requires the committee to have regard to the desirability of equal opportunity when fulfilling its general duty of assisting in the maintenance and development of standards in the training and conduct of those offering legal services. The committee has commenced a major review of legal education and training; this issue will be considered as part of that exercise.

Justices (Appointments)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether his Department applies any restrictions based on physical, sensory or mental impairments in the appointment of (a) justices of the peace, (b) coroners and (c) judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the appointment of judges and magistrates, the Lord Chancellor must be satisfied in the public interest that a candidate has the necessary physical and mental abilities to carry out the full range of duties of the post and any individual candidate is considered on his or her merits in the light of their particular circumstances. I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department that coroners are appointed by local authorities in accordance with qualifications laid down in the Coroners Act 1988, as amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990.

Court Service

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for organisational change in the management of the court service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: After detailed consideration, the Lord Chancellor has concluded that a move to executive agency status is the right way forward for the court service and he envisages setting up the service as an agency in April 1995.

Agency status will provide the management of the court service with a clearer focus on the job to be done, and greater flexibility to respond to the changing needs of all court users.

The agency will comprise the staff of the unified court service. It will exclude the staff of the magistrates court service, which is locally managed and whose organisation is dealt with in the White Paper "A Framework for Local Justice".

The conversion of the court service into an agency will not affect the judiciary, either in its independent role and functions or in its relations with the administration.

Consultation with the judiciary and the trade union side on this subject has recently begun and will continue with them, and with other interested parties, throughout the implementation period.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current projects and their value that are currently being funded in Indonesia by the Overseas Development Administration, European Community, World bank, Asian Development bank and other aid-giving bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Projects funded by ODA from the United Kingdom/Indonesia grant programme are:

Title	Allocation £ million
Coastal Fisheries	0·38
Animal Health—Phase 4	1·69
Coastal Prawn Culture	1·30
Tropical Forestry Management	10·77
Gas Distribution	9·70
Hydrocarbon Basin Assessment	5·98
Active Learning Professional Support	1·71
Library Development	0·75
English Language Training (National Level)	1·33
Institutional English Language Training	1·79
Biotechnology	0·43
South Sumatra Geological Survey	2·26
Regional Government Finance	0·91
Police Management Training	0·97
Development of Professional Training for Civil Engineering Consultants	1·74
Development of Mini-Hydros	5·61
Development of Thermal Power Plant Personnel Training Capability—Phase 3	1·20

We also support the activities in Indonesia of British non-governmental organisations such as Voluntary Services Overseas, Oxfam and Christian Aid. The Commonwealth Development Corporation, for which the principal source of finance is the British aid programme, has investments in Indonesia totalling £72 million, covering nine projects in sectors such as textiles, cement production, power and plantation crops.

Projects supported by the ODA under concessional loan arrangements include the following:

Title	Soft loan allocation £ million
Cigading-Serpong Railway Rehabilitation	24·690
Citayam-Cibinong Railway (New Line)	20·105
Steel Bridging Components	3·669
Forestry Radio Communications Network	34·111
Airport Security Systems	10·455
Flight Simulator for Civil Aircraft	4·659
Shortwave Radio Transmitters for National Broadcasting Network	26·911
Additional Generating Capacity for Jambi Power Plant	5·345
Equipment for Universities in Sumatra and Kalimantan	13·671

Most European Community aid to Indonesia is provided through the Community's Asia/Latin America programme, of which the United Kingdom contributes around 16 per cent. Recent project approvals have been as follows:

Title	Allocation £ million	Mecu[1]
Punggur Utara Irrigation Project	23·07	(29·3)
North Bali Irrigation and Water Supply	8·11	(10·3)
Forest Sector Support Programme	20·47	(26·0)

[1] Million European currency units.

The World bank has an active portfolio of 61 loans with a cumulative value of approximately $7·9 billion. For the Asian Development bank, the corresponding figures are 62 and $5·6 billion. For the International Fund for Agricultural Development, they are four and $66 million. Details of loan approvals are contained in the annual reports of these institutions, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Committee for the Prevention of Torture

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the European countries visited in each of the last three years by the European committee for the prevention of torture.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European committee for the prevention of torture (CPT) has visited the following countries in the last three years:

1990: Austria, Denmark, Malta, Turkey, United Kingdom.
1991: France, Germany, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey.
1992: Cyprus, Finland, Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, San Marino, Turkey.
1993: Luxembourg, Greece, Liechtenstein.

The CPT plans to visit Belgium, Iceland, Ireland and Norway by the end of the year. The CPT will then have visited all the states party to the convention.

Tibet

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently received regarding the Chinese occupation of Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received a number of letters and other expressions of concern about the situation in Tibet from hon. Members of the House and others. We share the concern about human rights there and particularly about the latest reports of detentions and demonstrations. With our European Community partners, we have been pursuing these matters with the Chinese authorities.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had urging a boycott of Chinese goods in protest at the Chinese occupation of Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: None. We have no plans to introduce such a boycott.

Mrs. Hamida Mattoo

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information about the death of Mrs. Hamida Mattoo he has received through the post in New Delhi from the Indian Ministry of External Affairs: what representations have been made to the Indian high commission in London about the circumstances of Mrs. Mattoo's death; when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Bradford, West following his letter of 15 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our high commissioner in Delhi took up the case with the Indian authorities and received a fact sheet from the Indian Home Ministry on 26 May which states that Mrs. Mattoo was killed on 3 March 1993 in crossfire between Indian security personnel and terrorists. I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly with details of the fact sheet. We have not made representations to the Indian high commissioner in London about Mrs. Mattoo's death.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers (Cash Payments)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if Departments in their capacity as employers notify the Inland Revenue when cash payments are made to Ministers to relieve financial pressures which affect their performance as Ministers.

The Prime Minister: I know of no such payments.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations underlie the policies of Her Majesty's Government with respect to giving substantive answers to parliamentary questions seeking details of the names, occupations and remuneration of Members of (a) health boards in Scotland and (b) district health authorities in England.

The Prime Minister: Non-executive health board members in Scotland are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and information on them is therefore held centrally and given in response to parliamentary questions. Non-executive members of district health authorities in England, however, are appointed by regional health authorities and not by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Executive members of health boards in Scotland and district health authorities in England are appointed by their respective board or authority. Information on them, therefore, is not currently available centrally.

The level of remuneration for health authority members in England, and for health board members in Scotland, is set centrally and this information is always provided in response to parliamentary questions.

Merlin Reactor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department is responsible for overseeing the decommissioning of the Merlin reactor at Aldermaston.

The Prime Minister: The nuclear installations inspectorate, which is now part of the Health and Safety Executive, was responsible for overseeing the decommissioning.

Kashmir

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 33, what information has been received through the high commission in New Delhi from the Indian Government about Shabir Shah and Yasin Malik; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: On 26 May, our high commission in New Delhi received a lengthy aide memoire from the Indian Home Ministry. This stated that both Shabir Shah and Yasin Malik are in custody in Jammu where they are awaiting trial. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will be writing to the hon. Gentleman with details.

School Visits

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the local authority maintained schools, grant-maintained schools and city technology colleges that he has visited since taking his present office.

The Prime Minister: I have visited a number of local authority maintained schools, grant-maintained schools and city technology colleges.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a further statement about the Government's commitment to making a contribution to the Jubilee line extension.

The Prime Minister: The Government, and I personally, remain committed to the Jubilee line extension as a major addition to the infrastructure of docklands and of London's transport. We have earmarked public funds for the line. As soon as negotiations with the companies involved in the financing of Canary Wharf have been concluded satisfactorily my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will authorise the start of construction and the first tranche of those funds will be made available. The line will then be built within an estimated 53 months. The draft funding agreement specifies that swingeing penalty payments will come into force if the line is not completed seven months after that.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advisory Committees

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make available a list of independent Government advisory committees dealing with human health, environmental protection and animal welfare, for which a list of members' registered interests are available, and the dates on which these registers were introduced.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Registers of members interests relating to the matters under consideration are published for the following committees.

Committee	Year introduced
Committee on the Safety of Medicines	1987
Medicines Commission	1987
British Pharmacopoeia Commission	1987
Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substances	1991

A register of members' interests is maintained for the Farm Animal Welfare Council by its secretariat.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the Government have for the future of Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Mr. Waldegrave: HMSO has made great strides since its establishment as one of the first executive agencies in 1988. The 1992 trading fund accounts, published today, show a current cost profit of £6·5 million against a financial target of £6 million—the fourth successive year in which profitability has increased. In order to build on this growing commercialism, I am commissioning a consultancy study to explore the scope for further commercialisation of the operations of HMSO. The study will incorporate the review of status which is required periodically of all executive agencies. It will also take account of the Government's concern to ensure that Parliament, Departments and agencies continue to obtain value for money when purchasing the products and services provided by HMSO.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the factors determining the level of import penetration of the United Kingdom for manufacturers since (a) 1979 and (b) the year ended June 1989; and to what extent the increase in import penetration is due to the increase in the real exchange rate since the second half of 1973.

Mr. Nelson: Rising import penetration is largely a consequence of the greater specialisation of international production, and has been experienced by virtually all other industrialised countries. The counterpart to this rising import penetration is higher exports. United Kingdom export volumes were at record levels at the end of 1992 and have grown faster than gross domestic product as a whole since 1979.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the retail prices index for (a) goods other than food, fuel and alcoholic drink and (b) services for each year since 1987 and for each month since August 1992; and what were the increases for the same periods in (i) earnings of manual workers in manufacturing industry, (ii) earnings of white-collar workers in the private sector and (iii) producer prices for manufacturing.

Mr. Nelson: The information for (a) and (b) is not available in the form requested and can only be produced at disproportionate cost.

The following table gives average gross weekly earnings of full time employees on adult rates with pay not affected by absence for April each year.

	Manual employees in manufacturing		Non-manuals in private sector

"The Sunday Times" (Letter)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the sending of a letter with reference number IDT ASS./DOCS/1.11.5. by an official in his Department to the political editor of The Sunday Times.

Mr. Lamont: I do not comment on letters sent on a "not for publication" basis.

Protection Money (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that tax relief is not granted for protection money in Northern Ireland; what estimate he has made of the extent of this abuse of the tax relief system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: There is little evidence of tax relief for protection money being widely granted in Northern Ireland, but we are looking into the matter in order to find an appropriate solution.

Income Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are taxed on (a) PAYE, (b) schedule D and (c) schedule E basis; and what is the tax yield for each category.

Mr. Dorrell: Available estimates for 1992-93 are as follows:

Source of income	Number of individual taxpayer[1] (millions)	Tax yield[2] (£ billion)
PAYE and other Schedule E	23·2	49·7
Schedule D[3]	3·1	7·5

[1] A taxpayer with both a schedule E and schedule D source of income is included in both rows of the table.
[2] The tax yield represents the tax liability on each type of income where that income is regarded as the top slice of a person's income.
[3] Excluding interest taxed at source.

Pensions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of the public sector pensions payable in each of the next 20 years assuming annual inflation of (a) 2 per cent., (b) 4 per cent. and (c) 6 per cent. and in respect of the next three years the proportion that such pensions are as a percentage of forecast gross domestic product.

Mr. Portillo: The data requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Costs

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, columns 292-94, what amount of additional employment costs is incurred by each Department in addition to wages and salaries.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is no longer collected centrally. The table sets out the information in respect of central Government Departments for 1991-92, the last year available.

	1991-92 £ million
Defence	238·9
FCO (including ODA)	50·0

Financial Regulation

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the Securities and Investments Board report on the state of financial regulation; and if he intends to make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 25 May, Official Report, columns 540-42.

Taxation

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish figures on the same basis as table 1 of appendix 4 to "Economic Trends", January 1992, on the total percentage of gross income accounted for by taxes of all kinds paid by (a) the bottom quintile of households and (b) the top quintile for households ranked by equivalised disposable income for 1991; and if he will estimate the same quintile groups on the same basis for each year from 1992 to 1996;

(2) if he will publish figures on the same basis as table 4 of appendix 1 to "Economic Trends", January 1992, on the total percentage of gross income accounted for by taxes of all kinds paid by (a) the bottom decile of households and (b) the top decile for households ranked by equivalised disposable income for 1991; and if he will estimate the same quintile groups on the same basis for each year from 1992 to 1996.

Mr. Nelson: The results for 1991 will be published in the May 1993 edition of "Economic Trends", due out on Wednesday 2 June. The required ratios can be derived from the figures in table 3, appendix 1, which is on the same basis as table 4, appendix 1 in the January 1992 edition of "Economic Trends".

The figures are based on the family expenditure survey. Projections are not available.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings would accrue to the Treasury if MIRAS was phased out in three equal stages in three years.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest tax relief at the proposed rate of 20 per cent. for 1994-95 is estimated to be £3·6 billion. Based on the estimated 1994-95 distribution of mortgages, if the relief were phased out in equal stages over a three-year period the estimated yield would be £1·2 billion, £2·4 billion and £3·6 billion.

These estimates adopt the conventional assumption that there will be no change in interest rates from the current rate of 8 per cent.

Civil Service

Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual value of 6 per cent. of the civil service pay bill; and what is the total annual expenditure on civil service pensions.

Mr. Portillo: In 1992-93, 6 per cent. of the civil service pay bill—excluding the pay costs of civil servants working in trading funds and trading bodies, and MOD civilians working in non-support areas—amounted to £704 million. Pensions paid to retired civil servants in the same year totalled £1,720 million.

Economic Policy (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all conferences and meetings of intergovernmental organisations he and Ministers of his Department have attended over the past year on the environmental impacts of economic and financial policy.

Sir John Cope: Treasury Ministers attend numerous meetings of intergovernmental organisations at which environmental issues may arise. It would not be practical to list all conferences and meetings of intergovernmental organisations which have touched on environmental issues.

EC Finance Ministers Meeting

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of European Finance Ministers.

Mr. Lamont: European Community Finance Ministers held an informal meeting with central bank governors in Kolding, Denmark on 21 to 23 May. The Governor of the Bank of England and I represented the United Kingdom.

The meeting discussed reports by the Monetary Committee and Central Bank Governors Committee on recent events in the exchange rate mechanism. It was agreed that specific conditions had applied in September 1992 with, in particular, an exceptionally large differential between United States and European interest rates. Member states emphasised the need for greater economic convergence and reaffirmed their support for the European monetary system. I made clear that the return of sterling to the ERM could not be contemplated until the requirements of United Kingdom and German monetary policy had come more closely into line. Copies of the reports of the Monetary Committee and Central Bank Governors Committee have been placed in the Library of the House.

Ministers also discussed German proposals for a harmonised system of withholding tax on interest paid to EC residents. It was agreed that these ideas needed further preparation before being considered by the Council. In addition, there was a discussion of the issue of unitary taxation in the United States, in the light of my announcement to the House on 13 May, Official Report, column 528. Other member states strongly supported the United Kingdom position and it was agreed that the presidency would write to the United States Administration underlining the importance member states attach to an early resolution of the problem.

The meeting also examined the relationship between environmental and economic policies and briefly discussed the Commission's proposals for an EC carbon/energy tax. This proposal is expected to be discussed by the Council at its next meeting.

Finally, Ministers discussed the unemployment situation in the Community and their remit from the Edinburgh European Council to consider measures to improve the functioning of the labour market.

The meeting was informal and there were therefore no votes or formal decisions.

Local Government Borrowing

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether local authorities are able to borrow from financial institutions outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury has today issued four general consents. Three of those consents, taken together with complementary approvals given by the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales, allow local authorities in England and Wales to borrow in sterling from any credit institution provided it is authorised by the supervisory authority of an EC member state. The fourth allows local authorities in Scotland to borrow in sterling from EC credit institutions.

These measures, which have been taken under section 43 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and under paragraph 4 of schedule 3 to the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975, make clear the interpretation of the legislation in England and Wales and ensure compliance with the single European market in banking services.

HEALTH

Young People in Care

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the operation of those provisions of the Children Act 1989 relating to assistance to young persons leaving care.

Mr. Yeo: We are closely monitoring the implementation of the Children Act 1989 as a whole, including the after-care provisions. A report on the first year's operation of the Act was presented to Parliament on 4 February 1993.

Mental Hospitals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 345, when the mental health task force is to begin collecting information on the closure of mental hospitals; when the data will be made publicly available; and what is the task force's definition of a long-stay psychiatric hospital.

Mr. Yeo: The mental health task force has begun to collect information on the closure of long-stay mental illness hospitals. It intends to complete an analysis of initial returns by the end of July, which I will make available. Information is being collected on those hospitals listed as mental illness hospitals with more than 100 beds in 1960 and which are still open, plus hospitals opened since then with more than 100 beds which are predominantly mental illness hospitals.

Colorectal Cancer

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of death from colorectal cancer have occurred in women and men in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 24 March at columns 617-20 for figures for 1987 to 1991. Information for 1992, the latest year for which information is available, is shown in the table.

Numbers of deaths from malignant neoplasms of the colon (ICD 153)[1] and malignant neoplasms of the rectum, rectosigmoid junction and anus (ICD 154)[1] by sex in England and Wales 1992

	Number
Males	8,749
Females	8,654

Occult Blood

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish guidance to doctors in relation to screening for occult blood.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to issue guidance at this time.

Fertility Treatment

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue guidelines about fertility treatment to unmarried couples or to individuals who already have children.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's code of practice gives guidance to fertility treatment centres. This includes advice on the factors to be considered by clinicians when considering an individual's suitability for treatment. These include the welfare of any child who may be born as a result of treatment and of any existing children in the family.

There are also guidelines for clinicians published by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. In the light of well-publicised recent cases, the Chief Medical Officer has already had discussions with the president of the royal college about these guidelines and these discussions will continue.

The Government have made it clear that health authorities should think carefully before providing fertility treatment to people without a stable family background. If there is evidence that this is not being followed, we will examine what further action needs to be taken.

Human Growth Hormone Treatment

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients who received human growth hormone treatment have utilised the helpline or availed themselves of the counselling provided through her Department; what help or advice is being offered with particular reference to financial matters, including life insurance availability and mortgages; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The helpline is provided by the department of growth and development at the Institute of Child Health of Great Ormond Street hospital. No record of the number of telephone inquiries has been maintained but the institute is also providing counselling for patients treated at one of the three London growth centres; of the 711 patients treated, 295 have asked for and received counselling. Details of the numbers of patients who have availed themselves of the counselling services provided elsewhere in the country are currently being collected. I understand that patients experiencing difficulty in obtaining life insurance or mortgages are advised to make inquiries across a range of providers of these services, since the terms and conditions very often vary.

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about financial support for those who received human growth hormone treatment and may now be at risk of contracting Creutzfeldt Jakob disease; and what estimate she has made of the cost of setting up an insurance fund for such people.

Mr. Yeo: We have received a number of representations, but as the treatment conformed with the best known scientific and clinical practice of the time we do not accept that there are grounds for financial support over and above the benefits which are available under the Social Security Acts. No estimate has therefore been made of the cost of a separate insurance fund.

Beverley Allitt

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors she took into account when deciding what type of further investigation to hold into the events at Grantham and Kesteven general hospital between February and April 1991 which were the subject of the recent trial of former nurse Beverley Allitt; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In deciding the form of inquiry, my overriding consideration was how to establish the facts behind the horrific Beverley Allitt case in the most rigorous and effective way possible, and ensure that the NHS learns any lessons for the future. The questions the parents want answered are the ones I want answered, and they must be properly and fully answered.

After careful consideration, I decided that this will best be achieved through an independent investigative inquiry, led by Sir Cecil Clothier, QC who has enormous experience in these matters. His advice, based on that long experience, was that, in cases such as this, the truth may more readily emerge in such an inquiry than in an adversarial public forum where witnesses may feel under strong external pressures. I would not have hesitated to order a public inquiry if I had thought that it would uncover the facts more effectively than the inquiry now being undertaken by Sir Cecil and his team.

In ordering the Clothier inquiry, I have obviously been concerned to establish confidence in it. Sir Cecil must be able to see all the witnesses and papers he requires. If necessary, I will give him the statutory powers to do so. He and his team will be acting independently of the parties involved. He will conduct his inquiry in London, away from the scene of Allitt's crimes. I have asked him to proceed as quickly as possible, consistent with establishing the truth, and to publish his report in full. I will, of course, do whatever is necessary to ensure that all possible steps are taken to ensure there is no repeat of such horrific and tragic events.

Clinical Complaints

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the complaints dealt with under the clinical complaints procedure during (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 were upheld.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Drug Use

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the research report from Durham university, prepared for her Department, on the prevalence of drug use among young people; in what form it will be published; and whether the publication will be the full report or a summary.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 May at column 510.

NHS Staff Grading Appeals

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff grading appeals are outstanding in (a) the West Midlands regional health authority area and (b) South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Yeo: There are currently 3,068 staff grading appeals outstanding in the West Midlands regional health authority area, of which 783 are outstanding for South Birmingham health authority.

Hospitals (Transport Facilities)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the co-ordination of hospital planning and the provision of transport facilities for patients and their visitors; and on what grounds she would refuse an application by a health authority or hospital trust for a change in the services it offered because of such transportation considerations.

Mr. Sackville: Ambulance transport for national health service patients is provided, free of charge, on the basis of medical need as determined by a clinician. Patients without a medical need for transport may, exceptionally, be transported by the ambulance service, but a charge may be made. Visitors must make their own transport arrangements. There are no plans to change the basis of ambulance transport provision.

Merseyside Health Bodies

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the regional and district health authorities, and hospital trusts on Merseyside, indicating when they were appointed, and their professional backgrounds.

Mr. Yeo: The chairman and non-executive members of the regional health authority, the chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts, and the chairmen of district health authorities in Mersey region are listed in the table, together with the dates from which their current appointments commenced. Information relating specifically to their professional backgrounds is not available centrally, but the most up-to-date information held on their occupations is listed.

The appointment of non-executive members of district health authorities is a matter for the regional health authority. Information on them, therefore, is not available centrally. Executive members of NHS authorities and trusts are appointed by their respective authority or trust, and therefore information on them is also not available centrally.

Hospices

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 May, Official Report, columns 447-48, on hospice support, what information has been given to regional health authorities with regard to the methodology used in calculating the transfer from the Department of Social Security to hospices; and what advice was given to regional health authorities as to the methodology to be used in determining the distribution of that allocation within each region.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the allocation and use of the transfer from the Department of Social Security to regional health authorities in respect of hospices was given in executive letter EL(93)14, sent to all regional general managers on 19 February 1993. A copy is available in the Library.

HIV and Sexual Diseases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is collected nationally to show (a) the number of people aged 65 years or over diagnosed as being infected with HIV and (b) the number of people aged 65 years or over found to have a sexually transmitted disease; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Reports of HIV infections are made to the communicable disease surveillance centre and communicable disease (Scotland) unit.

To December 1992, 88 HIV-infected individuals had been reported aged 65 and over. Information on other sexually transmitted diseases is collected only for the age category 45 and over. In 1991, 3,290 genito-urinary medicine clinic attendees were in this age band.

NHS Equipment

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has of the value of NHS equipment purchased by voluntary local subscriptions in each of the last five years in (a) cash terms and (b) in constant 1993 prices.

Mr. Sackville: Information exactly as requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued to NHS trusts and district health authorities concerning the use by private patients of equipment purchased by voluntary local subscriptions.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with her counterparts in the European Community on the incidence of food poisoning; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom plays an active role in regular discussions which take place in the European Community on a wide range of public health issues, including food hygiene and safety.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 261, what are the comparative figures for the incidence of food poisoning in each of the European Community countries for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: There are no comparable figures available for other EC member states.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 261, if she will make a statement on who is being consulted and asked for evidence in respect of the new Government surveillance programme into the sources and causes of human foodborne illness; and what opportunity members of the public are being given to contribute their views.

Mr. Sackville: The steering group on the microbiological safety of food is responsible to the United Kingdom Health and Agriculture Ministers for the microbiological surveillance of food. The remit of the steering group and its working groups covers the whole food chain from primary production to consumption, with external membership drawn from the Public Health Laboratory Service, the national health service, environmental health departments, food research organisations, the food industry, veterinary science and consumers.

A major study referred to in the previous answer is an epidemiological study of sources and causes of infectious intestinal disease in England. This study will take place in some 70 practices in the Medical Research Council's general practice research framework and will involve more than 20,000 volunteers. This study is one of a number of carefully designed surveys that will provide a better scientific basis for understanding human foodborne illness. Ministers are advised on the significance of these and other results by the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food.

I expect the first report of the steering group to be published later this year. Anyone who wishes to offer views about its activities is welcome to do so.

Pharmacists

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress her Department has made in negotiations with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee on pharmacists' remuneration.

Mr. Yeo: Discussions are continuing with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee. The next meeting is 15 June.

DEFENCE

Uniforms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific steps are taken to ensure that overseas suppliers of service uniforms purchased by the armed forces are not in receipt of hidden subsidies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It is our policy to encourage the development of a more open international market in defence goods through Government-to-Government negotiations, although it would not be practicable or cost-effective to investigate every potential supplier for hidden subsidies. Over 90 per cent. of my Department's contracts for clothing and textiles are placed with United Kingdom companies, though the nationality of sub-contractors is a matter for the company concerned.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the value of all contracts for the supply of service uniforms are currently placed with (a) British and (b) overseas suppliers.

Mr. Aitken: In financial year 1992-93, 91 per cent. of contracts for the supply of clothing for the armed forces were placed with British suppliers and 9 per cent. with overseas suppliers, including the EC. So far in the present financial year 1993-94, 97·6 per cent. of the value of all contracts for the supply of clothing for the armed forces has been placed with British suppliers and 2·4 per cent. with overseas suppliers, including the EC.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement indicating his Department's policy on the placing of contracts with overseas suppliers of service uniforms; and if he will make specific reference to the criteria by which value for money and strategic considerations are assessed.

Mr. Aitken: Over 90 per cent. of contracts for the supply of service clothing are let to British companies. Overseas suppliers could be invited to tender if they achieve admission to the defence contractors list or if they apply via the Official Journal of the EC bulletin. Orders are rarely placed with companies overseas.

Value for money from the defence budget is assessed through a system which includes contractor registration, quality assessment and the evaluation of offers with particular reference to price and delivery. Strategic considerations apply to only a small range of items, generally of a warlike nature, and are addressed through the selection of a limited number of companies which are to be invited to tender for the requirement.

International Military Services Ltd

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the shareholding in International Military Services Ltd. was transferred to Royal Ordnance; and how much Royal Ordnance paid for the International Military Services shareholding.

Mr. Aitken: All the shares in International Military Services Ltd. are owned by the Secretary of State for Defence. None has been transferred to Royal Ordnance.

Luchaire Defence SA

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 602, what was the value of contracts placed by his Department with Luchaire Defence SA between 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Aitken: Comprehensive records for this period are no longer available. However, my Department is aware of only one, low-value, contract placed with Luchaire in the period 1983 to 1988.

Departmental Records

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 23 April to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers), Official Report, column 241, if he will give the reason for the absence of complete records of his Department's dealings with companies between 1983 and 1990.

Mr. Aitken: Our central on-line computer records will identify all contracts placed before but not completed by 31 March 1990, and all contracts placed since 1 April 1990. Central records of contracts placed since 1983 but completed by 31 March 1990 have been archived on to magnetic tape and are not available on-line. Identification and checking of the tapes could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

The hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) asked about one specific company; it was possible to identify one directorate within my Department which seemed most likely to have dealt with the company, and its detailed local records identified just one contract.

European Armaments Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart in regard to French plans to develop a European armaments agency within the Western European Union.

Mr. Aitken: None. The proposal to establish a European armaments agency is under consideration at official level with our partners in European armaments co-operation within the Western European Union.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Wadley) of 19 May, Official Report, column 232, what was the cost of sending his departmental officials to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty preparatory committee meeting in New York; what proposals or papers were submitted by the United Kingdom to the meeting; and when and where the next NPT preparatory committee will be held.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although the NPT preparatory committee meeting was concerned principally with organisational issues, the United Kingdom delegation reaffirmed our aim of securing the NPT's unconditional, indefinite extension in 1995 and our commitment to supporting continuing progress towards nuclear disarmament. The travel and subsistence cost of sending Ministry of Defence officials to this meeting was some £4,000. The next NPT preparatory committee meeting will be held in New York from 17 to 21 January 1994.

Bomb Removal, Gower

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many bombs have been removed or rendered harmless on the beaches of north Gower by the Royal Navy during the last year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1992, 284 explosive devices were cleared from the north Gower marshes by the Royal Navy.

Overseas Trainees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from which military personnel have attended developmental and technical training courses in British military establishments since April 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The countries from which military personnel have attended developmental and technical training courses in British military establishments from April 1992 to April 1993 are as follows:

Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei

Departmental Land and Buildings

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what quantity of (a) land and (b) buildings was owned by his Ministry in each region of the United Kingdom at the end of each year from 1987-88 to 1992-93; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much has been spent by his Ministry on leasing land in each region of the United Kingdom for each year from 1987-88 to 1992-93; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much land has been leased by his Ministry in each region of the United Kingdom at the end of each year from 1987-88 to 1992-93; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how much money has been spent on purchasing (a) land and (b) buildings by his Ministry in each region of the United Kingdom from 1988-89 to 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Correspondence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the letter, dated 8 May, from Ms Lindis Percy; if he will place a copy of the letter from Ms Percy and his reply in the Library; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the correspondence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ms Percy will receive a reply within the next week and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will ensure that the hon. Member is provided with a copy.

Forest Moor Base

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the total cost of all works carried out at Forest Moor, in North Yorkshire, since March 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No major maintenance or new build has been carried out at Forest Moor since March 1990. Minor works and routine maintenance costs since then have been as follows:

1990-91	345,000
1991-92	501,000
1992-93	620,000
Total	1,466,000

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role is performed by the Forest Moor naval communications base in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Forest Moor is the Royal Navy's major HF receiver station.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who owns the land upon which the Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire is located; who occupies the station; who is responsible for the operation of the station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The land on which Menwith Hill station is located is owned by the Secretary of State for Defence, in right of the Crown. The site is made available to the United States Department of Defence and the station operates with the full knowledge and agreement of Her Majesty's Government.

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 86, if he will list the number of cases of United Nations military aircraft breaking the sound barrier over Bosnia-Herzegovina; what is the purpose of such practices; and what information he has on consequential damage to civilian property.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no information about whether non-United Kingdom aircraft have broken the sound barrier over Bosnia-Herzegovina. If such a practice had occurred and was suspected of causing damage to property, it would be a matter for the UN and NATO.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Attorney-General how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

The Attorney-General: Since April 1989, 60 recommendations by the Select Committee on Home Affairs have been made in respect of the Crown prosecution service arising out of three separate reports. One recommendation, which was accepted, was made in the Select Committee's first report in the 1989-90 Session on racial attacks and harassment (HC 17). Fifty-one were made in the fourth report in the same session on the Crown prosecution service (HC 118). Of these, 30 have been accepted and 11 were concerned with matters already being addresed in other areas. The remaining eight recommendations were made in the report on domestic violence printed on 25 February 1993 (HC 245). The Government's response to these is currently being formulated.

No recommendations in this period have been made in respect of the other Departments for which I am responsible.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Accountability)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what ways British Rail is accountable to Parliament; what limits he places on the scope and range of parliamentary questions about British Rail to which hon. Members will receive substantive answers; how this will change under this proposals for reform of the railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board is accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under the terms of the legislation applicable to the board.

It is for the House authorities to decide what questions are accepted for answer by Ministers, although there may be cases where questions approved for tabling are found on closer examination to be strictly operational matters for British Rail.

Under the Government's proposed reforms, the Secretary of State for Transport will retain substantial responsibilities on which he would continue to answer parliamentary questions.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the east London river crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Construction cannot begin until the current Court of Appeal hearings and the question of the EC infraction proceedings have been resolved. In the meantime, we are continuing with detailed design and other advance work.

Newham Flyover

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the likely timetable for the public inquiry and subsequent construction of the planned flyover at the intersection of Newham way and Prince Regents lane in the borough of Newham.

Mr. Norris: The public inquiries into the proposed flyover at the intersection of the A13, Newham Way, with the A117, Woolwich Manor way/High street south, and proposed underpass at the intersection of the A13 with the A112, Prince Regent lane, are planned to be held concurrently, starting in early September.

Subject to the availability of funds and the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures, advance works for the A117 scheme could start in the summer of 1994, and for the A112 scheme in autumn 1994. The main works for both schemes are scheduled for completion by mid-1997.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 158, if he will set out (a) the total number of letters he has received on plutonium transport from (i) hon. Members of Parliament and Lords and (ii) others, (b) the categories of individuals or groups who constitute the others; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the standard letter of response sent to inquirers.

Mr. Norris: During this year my Department has received one such letter from a member of the House of Lords, 35 from Members of the House of Commons, and 30 from members of the public, local councils and other organisations, including the Highland regional council, Strathclyde regional council, Argyll and Bute district council, the Scottish Green party, the international secretariat committee of the Nuclear Policy and Information Unit of Nuclear Free Local Authorities, and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. No standard letter of response was applicable to all the correspondence.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 91, what changes have been made in the text of the draft INF code in working paper 30; if he will list them; and when a final decision will be taken on implementing the code.

Mr. Norris: The draft code for the safe carriage of irradiated nuclear fuel in flasks on board ships was changed to cover also the carriage of plutonium and high level radioactive waste. A further section (9), concerning management, training and shipboard emergency planning, was also added to the draft code.

Subject to the approval of the 62nd session of the Maritime Safety Committee and the views of the Marine Environment Protection Committee, it is expected that the code will be submitted for adoption as a code of practice by resolution of the 18th assembly of the International Maritime Organisation—25 October to 5 November 1993.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of his Department's executive agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My plans are as follows:

(a) DVOIT: preparations for the privatisation of the agency are proceeding to timetable, with the aim of completing the sale by about the end of this year.

(b) The Vehicle Inspectorate: the consultation document issued last September said that standard setting and enforcement will continue to be provided by the agency. That remains my firm intention. I am grateful to all those who commented on the options described in the consultation document for the future provision of the testing of heavy goods vehicles and passenger carrying vehicles. I have carefully considered those views and have concluded that, in principle, VI's testing activities are suitable for transfer to the private sector, provided effective arrangements can be made to ensure that road safety standards are protected. The scope for this transfer is to be given further study. A copy of a letter to be sent to interested bodies about this has been placed in the Library; copies are available from my Department on request. I shall reach a final decision and announce it when the further studies have been completed.

(c) Transport Research Laboratory: I believe that the laboratory should be transferred to the private sector so as to enable TRL's managers and staff to compete more effectively for research work both here and abroad. I am appointing consultants to advise me on the options for privatisation and their feasibility.

(d) The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Driving Standards Agency and the Vehicle Certification Agency: As my hon. Friend indicated on 20 November 1992, Official Report, columns 406-407, we have been looking at the options for these agencies as part of the normal reviews of their framework documents. I have now concluded, on balance, that there should be no change in the status of DVLA at this stage.

In the case of the Driving Standards Agency, I am not satisfied that fair and uniform standards of testing could be secured if the work were contracted out, without disproportionate enforcement arrangements. The agency was awarded the charter mark last year and I want it—like DVLA—to concentrate on further measures to improve the quality and efficiency of its services.

The first priority for the Vehicle Certification Agency over the next few years is to ensure the smooth and effective adaptation to the new EC arrangements for whole vehicle-type approval. The options for privatisation and contracting out will, however, be reviewed again for all three agencies in three or four years time. Meanwhile, I have asked the chief executives to make full use of the market-testing initiative to secure best value for money.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on signing service areas from roads upgraded to motorway standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have today announced arrangements which will, in certain circumstances, allow temporary signing from newly upgraded roads of service facilities located off them. Copies of a press notice setting out the requirements a facility must meet in order to qualify for signing, and the circumstances in which signing will subsequently be removed, have been placed in the Library.

Operator Licences

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce the burden imposed on passenger and goods vehicle operators by the present operator licensing system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government remain committed to minimising the regulatory burden on the goods and passenger transport operators, including that imposed by operator licensing. We are today issuing a consultation document with a number of proposals for simplifying operator licensing by removing unnecessary requirements. Copies have been placed in the Library. Subject to the views of consultees, we intend to seek early legislation to implement these measures.

Rail Lines (Vandalism)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, columns 613-14, if he will provide a table indicating the number of offences by sentence for vandalism on rail lines in each year; and if he will list the offences which received four-year sentences.

Mr. Freeman: The information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Night Flying

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what increase in the number of night-time flights from Heathrow and Gatwick he envisages in the event of the adoption of the proposals in his recently published "Review of Night Flying" at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted;

(2) what consequences will arise form his Department's new night noise quota system in terms of additional night-time aircraft movements at Heathrow and Gatwick.

Mr. Norris: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) on 9 February and 10 March 1993 in Hansard, volume 218, No. 120, column 583, and volume 220, No. 140, column 567 respectively.

Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how figures for regeneration created traffic volumes are included in road construction assessments.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 24 May 1993]: The effects of regeneration on numbers of households, workers and jobs are taken into account by the Department in its estimates of future local traffic growth. The views of local authorities on these issues are sought from time to time, and incorporated in the Department's projections. Where regeneration is anticipated to have a substantial effect on the appraisal of a scheme, there are usually further discussions with local authorities, to enable the location and nature of regeneration created trips to be more precisely estimated and included in the assessment of the scheme. The forecast of total traffic growth in the area of a scheme is then controlled to be consistent with that area's traffic growth in the Department's national traffic forecast.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 24 and 25 May.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Agriculture Council from 24 to 27 May.

The Council reached agreement, subject to the adoption of legal texts, on agricultural prices and other measures for 1993-94, in so far as these had not already been settled as part of last year's reform of the common agricultural policy.

There was a difficult discussion on fixing the percentage requirement for non-rotational set-aside, to parallel the 15 per cent. rate for rotational set-aside fixed in last year's reform package. Given the important environmental advantages of non-rotational set-aside, I was determined to ensure that the figure should not be set at a level that made it unattractive to our farmers. For other member states, the Council adopted the figure of 20 per cent. proposed by the Commission. I secured agreement that the rate for the United Kingdom should be 18 per cent. for at least two years. Over this period, the effectiveness of non-rotational set-aside in the United Kingdom will be assessed to ensure that its impact on production is no less than expected; if it is less, the rate can be changed.

The Council agreed to an increase of some 25 per cent. in the rate of aid for set-aside land.

The cut in milk quotas provisionally agreed last year to take effect for 1993-94 has been deferred: it will be reconsidered next year in the light of the market situation. Instead, there will be an increase of 0·6 per cent. in national wholesale quotas for all member states except Spain, Greece and Italy. This is to meet particular needs, especially obligations arising from recent European Court judgments. In the negotations, I consistently argued that, since these obligations resulted fron the Court's reinterpretation of Community law, they should not be met by reducing the quotas of other producers, as the Commission originally proposed.

The Council confirmed increases in the milk quotas of Italy, Greece and Spain that had been provisionally agreed last year in the context of the reform package. It was made clear that these increases will only be continued beyond 1993-94 if the Council is satisfied that the countries concerned are complying with their undertakings to reduce production and implement the quota system in full.

The support price for butter will be reduced by 3 per cent. this year and 2 per cent. next. This will benefit consumers and is in line with the view which I strongly expressed in the Council that the Community's milk production should be regulated by price rather than by quota.

Earlier this month, the Commission unexpectedly threatened the future of export refunds on whisky and other grain-based spirits, which compensate for the higher price of Community-grown cereals. These are worth over £40 million per year to our industry. As part of the agreement reached in the Council, I secured agreement that the present arrangements will continue.

The Council agreed on a smaller reduction in the rate of aid for linseed production than the Commission had proposed. At the same time, linseed will be brought within the set-aside scheme from 1994-95 and not from the current year as the Commission originally envisaged. Since United Kingdom farmers account for over 60 per cent of Community linseed production, it was important to get these arrangements right. I believe they should avoid the replacement of this useful crop by additional grain production.

This outcome, particularly on the rate of non-rotational set-aside, the retention of whisky export refunds and the avoidance of milk quota cuts, made the Council an important achievement for the United Kingdom.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to how many times force majeure provisions have been invoked by each EC country, in each of the last three years, in relation to applications for annual sheep premium.

Mr. Curry: I do not have the information.

Setaside Land

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land of each agricultural grade in England and Wales is currently included in set-aside schemes; and what these figures are as a percentage of the total quantity of land of each of those grades.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on BSE.

Mr. Soames: A progress report on BSE in the United Kingdom is being presented by the Ministry to the general assembly of the Office International des Epizooties this month. The report gives detailed information on BSE in the United Kingdom up to the end of April. The report points to the firm evidence that the ruminant feed ban is having the predicted effect on the course of the epidemic. The number of suspect cases being reported is now no higher than at the same time last year, and the number of cases occurring in young animals has fallen sharply. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Care Homes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what weekly personal allowance single persons in residential care and nursing homes in Northern Ireland have a statutory right; and what checks have been made to establish whether this payment is made by proprietors;

(2) in what circumstances it is permissible for the proprietors of residential care and nursing homes in Northern Ireland to withhold payment in full of personal allowance to residents.

Mr. Hanley: For people in independent residential care and nursing homes with preserved rights, income support payments include an amount in respect of personal expenses which is at present £12·65 a week. In some cases residents contract for charges higher than the income support limits and may use the personal expenses allowance against these higher charges.

Residents placed by health and social services boards from April 1993 retain an equal amount for personal expenses from income support when their contribution towards the cost of their care is assessed.

Income support is normally paid direct to the claimant and the proprietor would not be involved in the payment of benefit unless appointed to act for the claimant where the person is unable to handle his own financial affairs and there is no other suitable person. The appointee can be changed if the social security office receives information which suggests that he is not fulfilling his duties. Case checks for claimants with appointees are carried out by visit every three years for those over pension age and every six months where an appointee is needed on a temporary basis.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistics he has on the number of reported cases of food poisoning in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Total
1988	302
1989	483
1990	819
1991	636
1992	916

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The information is as follows:

Nature of complaint	Date of complaint	Remedial action
Disclosure of personal data	March 1992	None necessary. Investigation revealed no breach in principles
Subject access request not answered within 40 days	23 July 1992	Centralised subject access address now used to ensure future compliance

Jubilee Maternity Hospital

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many midwives train annually at the Jubilee maternity hospital; what percentage of all midwives trained in Northern Ireland this figure represents; and what proposals exist to replace this training capacity under the plans of the Eastern health and social services board for the closure of the facility.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 19 May 1993]: The information is as follows:

Year	NI student intake	Jubilee placements	Per cent.
1992	85	24	28·2
1991	91	28	30·8
1990	102	33	32·4
1989	104	34	32·7
1988	111	36	32·4

The Eastern health and social services board has recently completed a consultation process on plans for acute hospital services, including obstetric services. My noble Friend Lord Arran is confident that there will continue to be sufficient placement opportunities for midwifery students in the Eastern board area.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of abattoirs in Northern Ireland and their combined average throughput in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990, (d) 1991 and (e) 1992; and what are the most recent figures available.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 26 May 1993]: Annual statistics maintained by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland are given in the table. Data are not available in the form requested before 1975.

Year	Number of plants	Average annual throughput per plant (Livestock units)[1]
1975	22	38,096
1980	21	47,786
1990	23	42,105
1991	22	42,786
1992	20	48,216
1993[2]	19	10,978

[1] One livestock unit—one adult bovine/seven sheep/three pigs.
[2] At 31 March 1993.

Rationalisation Plans

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the effect on the Province, and on rural areas in particular, of the independent rationalisation plans prepared by health boards; and what steps the DHSS (NI) will take to examine the implications of those plans.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 26 May 1993]: The plans of health and social services boards are not independent, but are formulated within the framework of the Department of Health and Social Services regional strategy, which sets out the Department's objectives and priorities for a five year period. Boards' plans are expected to pursue these objectives and, in so doing, to improve the health and social welfare of the population of Northern Ireland. The regional strategy contains a new theme of targeting health and social need, which requires boards to identify those areas and groups, including those living in rural areas, with particular needs and to ensure that services are targeted as far as possible on them.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to privatise the national weights and measures laboratory.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 4 May 1993, Official Report, column 4.

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the National Weights and Measures Laboratory for 1993-94.

Mr. Heseltine: I have set the National Weights and Measures Laboratory the following targets for 1993-94: to operate within its current expenditure budget;
to achieve the specific objectives set out in its current Corporate Plan; and to reduce the real unit cost of a programme-hour by 2 per cent.
The National Weights and Measures Laboratory is also required to meet a number of other targets, including quality of service targets. Its achievements against these last year will appear in its annual report 1992-93, which is due for publication shortly.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the agency the targets of replying to letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for replying within 10 working days; and producing auditable commercial-style accounts for the agency for 1993-94.

Environmental Organisations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what involvements his Department's affiliated laboratories have in the European network of environmental organisations.

Mr. Heseltine: Warren Spring Laboratory is a founding member of the European Network of Environmental Research Organisations and plays an active part in its affairs.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to maintain the knowledge and expertise in wastes management and recycling developed by Warren Spring Laboratory after the sale of its site in Stevenage.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Technology gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 21 May, Official Report, column 345. I hope to make a further statement about the future of Warren Spring Laboratory in the near future.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

Mr. Heseltine: In the 14 reports published by the Trade and Industry Select Committee since April 1989, to which the Government have responded, 210 recommendations were made, of which 154 have been accepted in whole or in part by the Government, or noted where no further action by Government was sought.

In addition, the former Energy Select Committee published 24 reports from April 1989 to March 1992. Copies of the responses made by the Government are available in the Library of the House.

"The Observer"

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the proposed sale of The Observer.

Mr. Heseltine: I announced on 14 May 1993, Official Report, column 599, that I had received an application for my consent to the transfer of The Observer newspaper to Guardian Newspapers Ltd., a subsidiary of The Guardian and Manchester Evening News plc. My consent is required under section 58(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973. I may give my consent to a newspaper transfer without a report from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission where I am satisfied the newspaper concerned in the transfer is not economic as a going concern and as a separate newspaper, and that, if the paper is to continue, the case is one of urgency. In this case, I am so satisfied and have today given my consent in accordance with section 58(3)(a) of the Act.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) objective 1, (b) objective 2 and (c) objective 3 areas there are within the European Community; and if he will list them, with the date when such status was granted in each case.

Mr. Sainsbury: (a) I refer the hon. Member to the list of objective 1 regions annexed to Council regulation (EEC) 2052/88. There are 24 such regions at present. (b) I refer the hon. Member to the Official Journal of 25 April 1989—No. L 206/26—and of 4 August 1990—No. L 112/19—which listed the objective 2 regions in full. There are 137 NUTS III level areas in the Community which are at present designated in whole or in part of objective 2 status. (c) objective 3 measures are available throughout the Community.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the applicants for objective 1 status within the European Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no formal application system for objective 1 status. For the period 1994 to 1999 the Commission have proposed adding the following regions to the current objective 1 list: the east German lander and east Berlin; Cantabria in Spain; the Scottish highlands and islands; Merseyside, and Hainaut in Belgium. The Government are also making the case for Devon and Cornwall, rural Wales and South Yorkshire to be designated for objective 1. Other cases have been put for Abruzzi in Italy, Flevoland in the Netherlands and part of France.

Brewery Industry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he is planning to generate more competition in the brewery industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 19 January, Official Report, column 159-60, and in his evidence to the Agriculture Select Committee—inquiry into the effect of the Beer Orders—it is desirable that the brewing industry should have a period of regulatory stability. It was for this reason that my right hon. Friend decided not to ask the Director General of Fair Trading—DGFT—to undertake a full-scale review of the effects of the Beer Orders, although the DGFT will continue to monitor the market and will investigate any evidence of anti-competitive behaviour in line with his statutory duties. There are, therefore, no specific plans to initiate further changes to the structure in the brewing industry or in the vertical arrangements as now regulated by the Beer Orders.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take to ensure that British Coal maintains all pits at full operational levels until (a) closure decisions have been reached and (b) the pit has been offered for sale or lease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has given repeated assurances to myself and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade that the fabric of collieries that it expects to offer to the private sector will be maintained both before closure decisions are taken and during the sale negotiations.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will instruct British Coal to offer all pits threatened with closure for sale or lease.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has given a commitment to offer all pits that it decides it no longer wishes to operate to the private sector.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if British pits, offered for sale or lease, will be offered with plant and infrastructure existing at the time of the decision by British Coal to cease operations at the colliery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The sale and leasing of pits and the deployment of machinery is a matter for British Coal which will want to have regard to the needs of its continuing collieries and its overall duty to manage their assets in the most effective manner. British Coal has, of course, committed itself to giving private sector operators a genuine opportunity to take on pits that it no longer wishes to operate.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to monitor redundancy arrangements conducted by British Coal in respect of their effect on independent reviews of threatened collieries.

Mr. Eggar: The detailed terms and operation of British Coal's redundancy scheme are a matter for the corporation.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about British Coal's plans to offer closing pits to the private sector.

Mr. Heseltine: British Coal has announced today that it is advertising four pits, Cotgrave, Silverhill, Easington and Bolsover, for disposal to the private sector.

In the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", Cm. 2235, the Government welcomed British Coal's commitment to offer to the private sector pits that British Coal does not itself wish to keep in production. I understand that British Coal has confirmed its intention to place further advertisements for all other pits in this category during the next few weeks.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what predictions he has for (a) British Coal, (b) National Power and (c) PowerGen, of future market share as suppliers of coal to British industry; and what predictions he has for proportion of imported coal for each company, to the year 2000.

Mr. Eggar: Estimates of the supply of coal by British Coal to industry were included in the report on "Markets for Coal" by Caminus Energy which was produced as part of my Department's coal review. A copy of this report is available in the Library of the House.

Cloth Imports (Korea)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the Government of Korea not to impose an additional duty on imported worsted and woollen cloth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 27 April 1993]: I expressed the Government's strong concern about proposed increases in import tariffs on textiles when I met Korean Ministers during my recent visit to Korea.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mortgage Interest

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 74, if he will update the figures to take account of the 1992 annual statistical inquiry.

Mr. Burt: The latest estimate is in the table.

1992	Number
Cases with full mortgage interest included in the assessment	435,000
Cases with half mortgage interest included in the assessment	64,000
Total cases with mortgage interest included in the assessment	499,000

Source: Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry May 1992.
Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessments he has made of the savings offered by photo-identity cards utilising smart card technology to reduce social security errors and fraud.

Miss Widdecombe: We have held preliminary discussions with Post Office Counters Ltd. about some potential proposals which it is considering to improve efficiency of payment of benefit through post offices and which would involve smart cards.

Contracting Out

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 298, which local authorities have contracted out aspects of their benefit administration; and which are considering doing so.

Mr. Burt: East Cambridgeshire district council and the London borough of Bromley have contracted out all aspects of their housing benefit and council tax administration which are permissible in current legislation; the district councils of Rutland and Mendip are in the process of doing so. No other authorities have yet come forward in response to the Department's request to notify us of positive intentions in this area.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated amount to be spent in 1993-94 in rent and other associated costs for the offices of his Department in John Adam street, London.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated expenditure in this Department for our accommodation at the Adelphi, 1-11 John Adam street, London in 1993-94 is £8·5 million. This figure is composed of rent and maintenance charges paid to Property Holdings and of a contribution in lieu of rates paid to the Crown property unit. This includes some additional space acquired in late 1992 which has helped to implement a major rationalisation programme which has enabled six other buildings to be released from the Government estate.

Severe Hardship Claims

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many severe hardship claims were made and grants awarded in the South Durham district in each quarter since April 1991;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 540-41, if he will provide a regional breakdown of the figures for severe hardship cases.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 26 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking how many severe hardship claims were made and grants awarded in the South Durham district in each quarter since April 1991; and pursuant to his Answer of 13th May, Official Report, columns 540-1, if he will provide a regional breakdown of the figures for severe hardship cases.

The information about severe hardship claims in South Durham is at Annex A. At Annex B I have appended a regional breakdown of successful and unsuccessful claims on a quarterly basis between January 1990 and March 1993.

This information has been obtained from the Severe Hardship Claims Unit. It should be noted that statistics relate to the number of claims made and may not equate to the number of customers.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Vincent Square

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to ensure that all listed buildings in Vincent square are retained.

Mr. Baldry: Government policy is that listed buildings should be retained in London or elsewhere except where a strong case can be made for demolition.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Supply Disconnections

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Institution of Environmental Health Officers concerning water supply disconnections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Institution of Environment Health Officers originally wrote to my right hon. Friend in November 1992, about the level of disconnections of domestic water supplies for non-payment of water charges and calling for the ability of water companies to disconnect domestic customers to be ended. They have argued that they consider disconnection renders properties unfit for human habitation.

In my view, disconnection does not mean that the property is statutorily unfit, as a supply of water remains available and can be readily restored. Both the Government and the Director of General and Water Services see disconnection as a matter of last resort for those customers who can pay but choose not to do so. It is right that customers should pay their bills, but also that where they are having difficulty, companies should ease matters for them so far as possible, for example, by enabling them to pay by frequent instalments. The director general issued guidance to water companies in April 1991, with the aim of ensuring a consistent approach by the companies on those lines. He has recently issued a report on the companies' response to the guidelines and is pursuing, through the regional customer services committees, improvements to individual companies' procedures in the light of their responses.

The majority of premises disconnected have their supply restored within 48 hours. Generally, a customer may be disconnected only after the company has obtained a court judgment for unpaid charges.

Leasing Policies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to extend the allowable lease term for the leasing of empty private sector dwellings by local authorities to a period of seven years.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities are free to take out private sector leases for any period they choose. Last December, my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced an extension of the concession which allows local authorities to take out short-term housing leases without lessening their capacity for capital expenditure. The Department is examining the provisions which apply to arrangements for temporary accommodation, and how these are being used.

Upward-only Rent Reviews

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) of 31 March, Official Report, columns 293-94, when he expects to introduce a consultation paper on upward-only rent reviews, confidentiality clauses and dispute resolution procedures in relation to new commercial leases.

Sir George Young: I am publishing a consultation paper today on upward-only rent reviews, confidentiality clauses and dispute resolution procedures in relation to new commercial leases, following my announcement on 31 March, Official Report, columns 293-94, in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason).

A copy has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. As I made clear in my earlier statement, the Government will carefully examine the responses before considering whether it is appropriate to legislate or take other action on any of these issues. They have no intention of legislating in any way that would alter the terms in existing contracts.

Fire Protection

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviromment what effort is being made to secure representation on the Department's fire advisory panel of members with special knowledge of passive fire protection.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not try to secure representation of particular sectors of the fire protection industry on the fire advisory panel. We do, however, seek an appropriate balance of expertise.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviromment what account his Department has taken of the lessons of the terrorist attack on the New York trade centre, in respect of fire resistance periods required for this type of building under the Department's present England and Wales regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: From the evidence currently available, there seems to be little to be learnt about fire resistance periods which is likely to be relevant to Building Regulations in England and Wales from the trade centre attack.

Council Tax

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviromment how many proposals for changes in council tax banding have so far been made to valuation offices in each local authority area in England; and what proportion of households this represents.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest date at which this information is available at billing authority level is 30 April. A table showing the number of proposals at that date in each area, and the proportion of dwellings this represents, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tax appeals have been received for the latest date at which information is available.

Mr. Robin Squire: By 20 May, listing officers in England had received 441,854 proposals to amend council tax valuation lists.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to (a) for each local authority, (b) for each region and (c) for England (i) the number of householders paying full council tax, (ii) the number of non-householders not directly paying council tax, (iii) the number of householders paying council tax partly rebated by council tax benefit and (iv) the number of householders paying council tax fully rebated by council tax benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimates requested are not available by region or by individual local authority. We estimate, however, for England, that 12·54 million dwellings are not subject to a discount, 2·65 million householders receive full council tax benefit and 1·76 million partial benefit, and 3·75 million dwellings benefit from a transitional reduction. We have no figures on the number of dwellings receiving a reduction in respect of special features for residents with disabilities. As many dwellings receive more than one type of reduction, and some may indeed receive all four, we cannot estimate overall how many dwellings do not pay full council tax. Information is not collected on the number of non-householders not directly paying council tax.

Glazing

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an inquiry into the appropriate standards of glass and glazing to take account of the performance of certain kinds of glazing when affected by bomb explosions.

Mr. Baldry: Investigations already in progress are intended to provide appropriate guidance and standards.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what improvement in the standards relating to glass and glazing have been implemented since April 1992.

Mr. Baldry: On 1 June 1992 a new requirement—part N—of the Building Regulations was brought into force. This introduced for the first time detailed provisions to improve the safety of glazing in buildings.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment is being carried out of the effect of the present standards of glazing in business premises following the recent bomb outrages in the City of London.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has brought forward the start of a collaborative research programme with relevant construction industry bodies to prepare a guide for the design of buildings to limit the damage from explosive attack. The project team is examining the damage in the City of London. The Department is in discussion with representatives of the window and glazing industry on the development of appropriate standards.

Building Materials

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation of the relative strengths of building materials was made consequent to the recent bomb explosions in the City of London.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has examined the damage as part of its continuing programme of developing design guidance for use by the construction industry.

Black Country Development Corporation

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for the Black Country development corporation the names of the chairman and board members, their occupations or professions and their level of allowances or remuneration payable.

Mr. Robin Squire: The board of the Black Country development corporation is comprised of:

Chairman—
Sir William Francis—Civil Engineer
Deputy—
Christopher Hawkins—former MP, Economist
Members—
Roger Carey—Executive Director, construction group
Bill Clarke—Local Authority Councillor
John Edwards—Local Authority Councillor
Roger Burman—Chairman, electronics group
Mike Bird—Local Authority Councillor
Ian Flanagan—Chartered Surveyor

Dr. Diana Green—Deputy Director, higher education
Michael Worley—JP, TEC Chairman
Hugh Ellis Rees—Former Regional Director in DOE
James Antill—Chairman, private sector

The chairman receives £25,230 for two days per week. The deputy chairman receives paid £17,185 and each board member £5,030.

Homelessness

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the rough sleepers initiative to the outer London boroughs.

Mr. Baldry: None. Responsibility for people sleeping rough outside central London rests with local authorities.

Housing Association Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, columns 360-61, if he will publish figures showing the average increase in rents for housing association tenants with assured tenancies in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not available for all housing association tenants with assured tenancies.

The figures set out show the annual increases in average assured tenancy rents for new lettings made in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Urban Priority Areas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to conclude his review of urban priority areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department is currently discussing with the local authority associations and other organisations how to use 1991 census data and other information in assessing urban needs. This consultation will in due course inform decisions on the targeting of resources to urban areas.

Coal

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the interim opencast planning guidelines will influence the output of opencast coal.

Mr. Baldry: Neither the planning system in general, nor the interim guidance which my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 25 March, set limits on or targets for coal production. Planning permissions for coal extraction depend upon the extent to which the inductry bring forward proposals which are acceptable in land use planning terms having regard to all material considerations, including the interim guidance.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to encourage local authorities to use British coal.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for local authorities to make their own decisions in purchasing goods and services, subject to the requirements of law and financial propriety. Authorities may not discriminate on the basis of the country of origin of supplies, since this would be contrary to part II of the Local Government Act 1988, the Public Supply Contracts Regulations 1991 and the treaty of Rome.

Mansfield Enterprise Zone

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations and criteria will be used in deciding the area and boundaries for the recently announced enterprise zone in the Mansfield travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: These criteria have yet to be finalised.

Council House Sales

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost since its inception of advertising the council house right-to-buy scheme; what plans he has for a further advertising campaign; and what estimate he has made of the cost of such a campaign.

Mr. Baldry: A total of £4·5 million has been spent on seven publicity campaigns since the inception of the right to buy in 1980.

A further campaign in the autumn will publicise the introduction of the option to buy on rents-to-mortgages terms. Detailed costings are not yet available, but are likely to be similar to those of our most recent campaign, earlier this year, which cost about £1 million.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated amount to be spent in 1993-94 in rent and other associated costs with the offices of his Department in Marsham street, London.

Mr. Howard: No. 2 Marsham street is a Crown freehold building. Estimated expenditure by my Department for its accommodation within the building in 1993-94 is £12·8 million. This figure is composed of internal rent and maintenance charges payable to Property Holdings and a contribution in lieu of rates payable to the Crown Property Unit.

Tenants' Rights

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the consultation paper "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage"; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The consultation paper "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage" was issued in December 1992. Recipients were invited to submit responses by 26 February 1993. The Department received 99 by that date, with a further 42 arriving afterwards. Respondents broadly welcomed the Government's proposals for increased tenant involvement through the process of compulsory competitive tendering for housing management and an expansion of tenant control through the new right to manage. The responses contained a number of helpful and constructive suggestions on detailed points, which will be taken into account when regulations and guidance are prepared.

A summary of respondents is as follows:

	Number
Local authorities	82
Tenants' organisations	28
Tenant management organisations	3
Section 16 funded advice agencies	6
Housing associations	4
Local authority associations	3
Others	15
	141

Copies of the responses are available for examination in the Department's library.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish a management statement for the Countryside Commission.

Mr. Maclean: I have today issued a management statement to the Countryside Commission setting out the commission's role and responsibilities and the framework for its relationship with my Department. A copy of the statement will be placed in the Library of the House.

Government Initiatives, South-East

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of support given by his Department to urban development corporations, the urban programme, city challenge and other inner-city initiatives in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year since 1982-83, including estimates for 1992-93, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 May 1993]: The table sets out total net spending by the Department of the Environment for each year since 1984-85, excluding housing, inner cities and all credit approvals/capital allocations. Comparable figures for spending before 1984-85, and a differentiation between current and capital spending before 1988-89, are not available. Information on the regional spread of this spending is also not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of support given by his Department to all initiatives other than housing and inner cities in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year since 1982-83, including estimates for 1992-93, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. Redwood: The total amount of support given by my Department's urban group of programmes, year on year from 1982-83 to 1992-93 and excluding LA credit approvals/capital allocations, are as follows:

The UP, UDC and city challenge programmes contain varying proportions of capital and current expenditure; detailed information on each could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the average (a) local authority expenditure and (b) Government grant to local authorities per head of population in England, for the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) what has been (a) the expenditure and (b) the Government grant per head of population of (i) Cheltenham borough and (ii) Gloucestershire, for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 26 May 1993]: Local authorities report the following:

Central Government grants and local authority expenditure[4]

	1990-91 £ per head	1991-92 £ per head	1992-93 £ per head

[1] Revenue support grant, special grants inside AEF, community charge grant (1991-92). These grants also partially financed the precept made on the collection fund by Gloucestershire CC.

[2] Specific grants inside AEF. These grants support spending by all tiers of authority. As the two authorities do not cover the same functions, the specific grants are quite different in size and composition. Also includes additional grant for teachers' pay (Gloucestershire, 1992-93), and community charge benefit grant and community charge transitional relief/reduction scheme grant paid to Cheltenham.

[3] Revenue support grant, specific grants inside AEF, community charge grant (1991-92), special grants inside AEF, additional grant for teachers' pay (1992-93), community charge benefit grant and community charge transitional relief/reduction grant.

[4] Revenue expenditure to compare with TSS.

WALES

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers and value of offers of (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional enterprise grants in Wales in 1991-92 and 1992-93 and the forecast outturn for 1993-94; and if he will list (i) the number of applications, (ii) the associated project costs and (iii) the amount of grant paid.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is published annually in the Welsh Office departmental report, the Welsh Office appropriation accounts and the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual report. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

School Meals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in Wales qualified for free school meals in 1992-93; and if he will also provide these figures as a percentage of the total school roll.

Sir Wyn Roberts: From provisional schools census data, 98,466 pupils in LEA-maintained schools in Wales were entitled to free meals at September 1992. This represented 20·6 per cent. of the total school roll.

Glass Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the volumes of glass collected for recycling in Wales in each year from 1989; and what percentage of collected glass was recycled in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information supplied to the Welsh Office by the British Glass Manufacturers Confederation is as follows:

Tonnage of glass collected during the year[1]

Year	Tonnage
1989	2,539
1990	4,710
1991	7,231
1992	8,559

[1] Total of districts for which data are available. Excludes glass not collected by members of the bottle bank scheme.

All collected glass is recycled.

Mortgage Assistance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures indicating (a) the number of claimants for income support in respect of mortgage interest, (b) the average weekly payment and (c) the total annual payment in each year since 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures for claimants of income support who have mortgage relief considered in their assessment are shown in the following table. Those for 1988 are not readily available. Deductions may be made to cover assumed contributions from non-dependants living in the household. The amounts quoted are those considered in the assessment rather than the amounts actually paid to claimants.

National Health Service Property

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all national health service properties and estates in Wales, indicating their value in each case; and if he has any plans for their future management.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have placed a list of all national health service properties in Wales and their values, based on valuations completed in 1992, in the Library of the House.

I have no plans to change the existing day to day management arrangements for the national health service estate in Wales beyond those which flow from the establishment of national health service trusts. However, following wide consultation on proposals to strengthen the strategic management of the national health service estate my right hon. Friend has approved the establishment of a strategic estates unit, National Health Service Estates: Wales, to be located within the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Empty Homes

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of empty private homes in Wales and of how many of these are (a) repossessed empty houses, (b) empty unsold private homes currently on the market and (c) inherited private homes which remain empty.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is estimated from the 1991 census of population that there were 56,400 vacant private sector household spaces in Wales. A household space is the accommodation available for a household and is defined in "1991 Census Definitions", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Information on the cause of vacancy is not available.

Temporary Accommodation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total number of families living in temporary accommodation in each local authority area in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is available only for the number of households, rather than families living in temporary accommodation and is as follows:

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children under the age of five years are resident or attend school in areas with drinking water with over 10 microgrammes of lead per litre.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on areas with drinking water with over 10 microgrammes of lead per litre is not available.

Diabetics

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current incidence of blindness among diabetics expressed as (a) the total number and (b) the percentage of all diabetics, in each health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Consultant Surgeons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will collect centrally information from each hospital trust on the workload that each consultant surgeon is to carry under their contractual obligation to the trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. This is a matter for individual NHS trusts.

Business Start-up Programme

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales the business start-up programme has helped since its inception in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since its inception in 1991, the business start-up programme has helped more than 6,000 people in Wales.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of self-employed people in Wales for each year since 1979; what percentage of the work force they constituted in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures requested are given in the following table:

Civilian employment estimates

Business Parks

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the business parks that have been established in Wales in each year since 1987; which counties they are in; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information is not held centrally. I understand, however, that since 1987 the following major sites, categorised as business parks, have been, or are being, established by the Welsh development agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales:

County	Site
Clwyd	St. Asaph
	Northop
	Warren Hall
Dyfed	Parc Teifi
Gwent	Langstone Park
	Imperial Park
	Cleppa Park
Gwynedd	Parc Menai

Mid Glamorgan	Ynysyplwm
South Glamorgan	Cardiff Gate
West Glamorgan	Penllergaer
Powys	Broadaxe
	Wye Valley
	Woodlands

Exports

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh gross domestic product in 1992-93 resulted from exports to European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available for Wales.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales the enterprise allowance scheme has helped since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The enterprise allowance scheme has helped 37,958 people in Wales since 1983. The scheme was replaced by the business start-up programme in April 1991.

Radon Gas

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Institution of Environmental Health Officers concerning the contamination of houses in Wales by radon gas.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office officials have discussed radon in Wales with representatives of the Institute of Environmental Health Officers on a number of occasions.

Urban Waste Treatment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas in Wales proposed to him as candidate sensitive areas under the EC urban waste treatment directive by (a) Countryside Council for Wales and (b) the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In March 1993, the Welsh Office, together with the Department of the Environment and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, published its response to the consultation exercise it carried out on the criteria and procedures for identifying sensitive areas under the urban waste water treatment directive. The National Rivers Authority has been asked to compile a list of candidate sensitive areas using these criteria. Although the Countryside Council for Wales has not made any proposals on the basis of the finalised criteria, it will be consulted about the NRA's list.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the average pre-tax turnover, (b) the number of start-ups and (c) the number of people employed for small businesses in Wales in each year since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The tables give an indication of the distribution of turnover between units, grouped by size, in Wales. Information prior to 1989 is not readily available and the size bands published were changed in 1991.

New VAT registrations give an indication of the number of business start-ups for each year. Firms with a turnover of less than £1 million each year account for over 96 per cent. of the total.

Year	Number of new VAT registrations
1980	7,070

Farmers (EC Aid)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 523-24, what proportion of integrated administration and control system submissions by Welsh farmers included an estimate of forage areas on a field-by-field basis.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available. Livestock producers who did not have access to maps which would have provided them with the precise details were given the option to submit estimates of field sizes. They were not, however, required to indicate whether the figures were derived from maps, otherwise computed or estimated.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation regarding the cost of the corporate relaunching and logo unveiling ceremony at the Mermaid theatre on 18 March.

Mr. David Hunt: None. Individual schemes within the approved marketing budget are a matter for the board of the Cardiff Bay development corporation, subject to the usual delegation arrangements with my Department.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 90, when he now expects to be able to release an officer to undertake the quinquennial review of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Mr. David Hunt: An officer has now been released and began work on the review on 17 May.

Regional Aid

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the continuation of the eligibility of the Bridgend travel-to-work area for regional aid.

Mr. David Hunt: The representations received about the review of assisted areas, including those relating to the Bridgend travel-to-work-area, are currently being considered.

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to be able to announce whether Wales will continue to be treated as a separate region for available set-aside.

Mr. David Hunt: As soon as possible.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the continuing eligibility of the travel-to-work areas currently benefiting from regional aid.

Mr. David Hunt: The representations received about the review of assisted areas are currently being considered.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about representations he has received on the future shape of the regional aid map in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received numerous representations about the review of assisted areas. These representations are currently being considered.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discretion he enjoys in determining the number of livestock to be processed in low-throughput slaughterhouses.

Mr. David Hunt: The EC fresh meat directive contains arrangements for small slaughterhouses, which can benefit from a special list of structural requirements. Following discussions during December's Council of Agriculture Ministers, the Council agreed to increase the throughput limit for small slaughterhouses from 12 to 20 units per week until 31 December 1994. During this period, the Commission will review the implications of the meat hygiene directives for traditional small businesses. The Government will work closely with the Commission as it carries out this review.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since April 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the "Sessional Information Digest", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. This lists Select Committee reports and provides reference numbers to my Department's responses where appropriate.

Strategic Planning Guidance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Assembly of Welsh Counties or with Welsh representatives of individual counties in relation to the strategic planning guidance exercise recently completed; what financial considerations governed the funding of the planning exercise; what information on the contents and findings will be made public; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1990, the Assembly of Welsh Counties—AWC—accepted my right hon. Friend's invitation to co-ordinate the strategic planning guidance in Wales exercise and to report the results of the work to him. The work has included an assessment of the existing strategic planning guidance that provides the framework for the preparation of development plans and identification of the main strategic planning issues likely to affect Wales in the next 10 to 15 years. The Department has kept closely in touch with the progress of the exercise and officials have attended the seminars arranged by the AWC to discuss the interim results. The management of the exercise, its scale, degree of consultation and the consequent financial considerations are a matter for the AWC. My right hon. Friend expects to receive the final report shortly and will consider fully what further action is necessary. I understand that the AWC will be making its report publicly available. I will ensure that a copy is placed in the Library of the House.

Cereals

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of his inquiries as to Welsh cereal yields.

Mr. David Hunt: I commissioned a study of the various cereal yields in Wales, on which I consulted the farming industry. I am now considering the findings of the study, taking into account the various representations made to me.

Prince of Wales Hospital, Rhydlafar

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the proposed inquiry into the running of the orthopaedic department at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The health authority informed the Department that it was instituting an inquiry into certain aspects of the running of the orthopaedic department at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 467, on public appointments, if he will list (a) the deletions from the list of appointments he makes to public bodies which have arisen since 23 March and (b) the current vacancies among appointments which he makes.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows, reflecting the position as at 7 May 1993.

(a) Deletions:

Appointee	Public body
Mr. D. M. Barling	Plant Variety and Seeds Tribunal (Cereals)
Mr. E. Rae Mr. I. Jones	Development Board for Rural Wales
Mr. G. C. Crimp Mr. T. G. R. Davies Councillor Mr. K. F. Powell	Sports Council for Wales

Barry Neighbourhood Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the transfer of responsibility for the proposed Barry Neighbourhood hospital to the Llandough NHS trust; and what representations he received from South Glamorgan health authority in relation to this issue.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It was concluded that the interests of patients from the Vale of Glamorgan would be best served by linking the proposed Barry Neighbourhood hospital to Llandough hospital NHS trust rather than to the community and mental health unit.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to the Welsh NHS trusts in relation to the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for existing staff transferred from health authority employment to trust employment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A guidance document "NHS Trusts: A Working Guide" was published by HMSO in October 1990. This makes it clear that in making arrangements for staff transfer, and undertaking consultation, health authorities should assume that the transfer of undertakings regulations and the European Commission directive on acquired rights apply. Also, all staff who transfer to trust employment retain their existing contracts and rights. Further guidance in the form of a circular "National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 —Staff Transfer Schemes" has been issued to the NHS in Wales which also refers to the protection of the rights of NHS employees on transfer to an NHS trust.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will lift the requirement for local authorities in Wales to expose work to competitive tendering before and after local government reorganisation.

Mr. David Hunt: "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future", Cm 2155, affirms the Government's commitment to compulsory competitive tendering—CCT—as a means of ensuring that local government services are efficient and give good value for money.

It also proposes special arrangements for CCT during the transition from the present structure of local government to the new unitary authorities. I have been considering the detail of those arrangements for work which is currently subject to CCT and have concluded that, generally, local authorities should not be required to submit to competition work which they propose to carry out between 1 April 1994 and 30 September 1996.

This period of exemption is intended to smooth the transition to the new authorities. They will be able to examine the best way of organising their services and, where appropriate, put fresh arrangements in place before exposing work to competition. More importantly, they will be able to focus, in the time after their election, on the immediate requirement to establish reliable and effective service delivery arrangements. The proposed exemption would apply to CCT under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988, and would be given effect by secondary legislation under those Acts.

I have decided that there are nevertheless some circumstances in which competition should continue to be required. These are:

(i) construction contracts worth over £1 million. This would affect primarily the highways departments of county councils;

(ii) work carried out by authorities, such as community councils, to which the 1980 and 1988 Acts apply but which are not affected by the reorganisation.

None of these arrangements will affect contracts which the private sector in Wales has already won through CCT. The White Paper makes it clear that, where such contracts expire after the date of reorganisation, they will run for their full term and will be assigned to the appropriate unitary authorities. Detailed guidance on this, and on technical aspects of the transition as it affects direct service organisations, will be issued.

These arrangements would not prevent authorities from voluntarily submitting work to competitive tendering during the period of the exemption. Nor would they have any effect on competition requirements set by the European Community.

CCT will not be further extended in Wales until after reorganisation has taken place. The timetable will be discussed with the local authority associations and an announcement will be made in due course.

Tenants' Rights

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an announcement on the responses received from within Wales to the consultation paper "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The consultation paper "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage" was issued for consultation in December 1992. Recipients were invited to submit responses by 26 February 1993. Seventeen were received by that date from local authorities and others in Wales, with a further four arriving afterwards. Respondents broadly welcomed the Government's proposals for increased tenant involvement and the expansion of tenant control through the new right to manage. The responses contained a number of helpful and constructive suggestions on detailed points, which will be taken into account when regulations and guidance are prepared.

A summary of respondents from within Wales is as follows:

	Number
Local Authorities	12
Local Authority Associations	1
Tenants' Organisations	6
Others	2
Total	21

Copies of the responses are available for examination in the Welsh Office Library.

Sheep Identification

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on sheep identification.

Mr. David Hunt: A directive on the identification and registration of animals—92/102—was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 27 November 1992. It lays down minimum Community requirements for the identification and registration of cattle, sheep, goats and pigs. The objective is to set up a harmonised system which will enable animals to be traced back to their farm of origin, both for disease control purposes and for controlling payments made under the common agricultural policy. The national systems for sheep and goats do not have to be in place until January 1995. Agriculture Departments are discussing with industry organisations how these new requirements will be implemented so as to minimise the burden on the industry as a whole.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Advisory Services

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to regulate the operation of unqualified immigration advisory services.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have drawn the attention of those planning the new Immigration Appeals Advisory Service and of the Law Society to the recommendation of the Home Affairs Committee that a register of responsible agencies should be established. Should such a list be drawn up, we would be ready to consider making it available to applicants. We have no plans ourselves to draw up a register, or otherwise to regulate advisory services of this kind.

Racial Attacks, Pendle

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial attacks were reported in Pendle for each year since 1979; and how many complaints were addressed to the Commission for Racial Equality by persons resident in Pendle in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions are included in the contract for managing the Wolds prison and for transporting prisoners to prevent the contractor employing convicted criminals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the restrictions in the contracts for the management of Wolds Remand Prison and transporting prisoners to prevent the contractor employing convicted criminals.

Under the terms of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, people who are to be employed as prisoner custody officers in a contracted out prison or on court escort work have to be certified by the Home Office. This means we have to be satisfied that they are fit and proper persons for such duties and have received training to a standard that we have approved. In addition to these statutory safeguards for custodial staff our standard contract also requires a contractor to provide details to us of all other personnel, including sub-contracted staff employed on a contract.

In practice, this means that all those working at Wolds Remand Prison; in the court escort service in the East Midlands and Humberside and on all future such contracts are subject to routine enquiries about their suitability to work with the prisoners in the same way as happens with staff employed by the Prison Service. These include a criminal record check, to identify any convictions which might render the applicant unsuitable. Decisions about suitability are made to the same standard as, and in accordance with, Prison Service practice.

Unit Fines

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Magistrates Association on the operation of the unit fines system since his statement of 13 May.

Mr. Jack: Since 13 May 1993, my right hon. and learned Friend has received no formal representations from the Magistrates Association, but Home Office officials met representatives of the association on 20 May to discuss options for replacing the current unit fine provisions.

Drugs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were serving prison sentences at the latest available date of over three years in prisons in England and Wales for drug offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 May 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of men and women in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales serving sentences of over three years for drug offences.

The latest available provisional figures by offence and sentence length are for 31 March 1993 and cover around 80 per cent. of sentenced prison population. They show some 1,300 male and 200 female prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales recorded centrally as being sentenced to over three years for drug offences, excluding any where drugs offences were not the principal offence.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many confiscation orders were made under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 for each year from 1987; what was the total value of the assets ordered to be confiscated and the actual amount recovered by way of confiscation, in each of those years; and what percentage this represented of the total amount ordered to be confiscated in each year.

Mr. Jack: Information collected centrally is given in the tables. A direct comparison between the amount ordered to be confiscated and the amount realised cannot be made because these data are collected from two separate sources and cover calendar and financial years respectively.

Table A
Offenders ordered to pay confiscation orders under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 by amount 1987-1991
England and Wales

Year	Number of orders made	Total amount confiscated £
1987	203	1,177,000
1988	539	8,096,700
1989	802	7,851,900
1990	871	10,142,500
1991	1,005	6,501,500

Table B
Amount (£) recovered[1] by the Secretary of State in confiscation orders under the Drug Trafficking Offenders Act 1986 by financial year 1987-88 to 1991-92
England and Wales

Year	Amount recovered £
1987-88 / 1988-89	600,000
1989-90[2]	1,375,200
1990-91[2]	1,448,000
1991-92	5,384,500

[1] The information collected centrally is known to be incomplete as returns were not received from all petty sessional divisions.
[2] There was some confusion with the recording of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and the Criminal Justice Act 1988 during these two years. In consequence it is considered that data has been under-recorded for the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and over-recorded for the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the research report from Sheffield university, prepared for the Home Office, on the prevalence of drug use among young people; in what form it will be published; and whether the publication will be the full report or a summary.

Mr. Jack: The research findings will be published in full later this year, in book form.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women serving a prison sentence in prisons in England and Wales at the latest available date after having been convicted of sexual offences against children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 May 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of men and women in custody for sexual offences against children.

The latest available provisional figures are for 31 March 1993. They show that about 210 male and 3 female prisoners were serving sentences in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for unlawful sexual intercourse with a female under 16 years of age or gross indecency with or indecent assault on a child. Other inmates will however be serving sentences for rape, buggery and other sexual offences and for murder involving a sexual assault. The statistics for these offences do not distinguish the age of the victim.

Segregated Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women, were segregated under rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 10 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 25 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of men and women segregated under Rule 43 on 10 May.

The following table shows the number of males and females (both adults and young persons) removed from association under Rule 43 of the Prison Rules and Rule 46 of the Young Offender Institution Rules, in Prison Service establishments in England and and Wales on 10 May.

	Rule 43/46 Own protection	Rule 43/46 Good order and discipline	Total
Males	1,391	272	1,663
Females	22	3	25
Total	1,413	275	1,688

The above table does not include inmates in designated vulnerable prisoner units where Rule 43 and Rule 46 restrictions do not apply.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, columns 445-46, what changes have been made in the last 24 months to the criteria applied to refugees with exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom when assessing whether or not they should be granted United Kingdom travel documents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There has been no change in our policy during the last 24 months. Reinforcement of the asylum division has allowed closer consideration to be given, in accordance with that policy, to some applications where we believe it would be possible for a national passport to be obtained.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, columns 445-46, what criteria are applied to individuals from Sri Lanka on exceptional leave to remain when requesting travel documents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All asylum applicants who are found not to be refugees but who are granted exceptional leave to remain may apply for Home Office travel documents if they are unable to obtain a national passport. As with other nationalities, applications from people from Sri Lanka are considered on their individual merits.

Glazing

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been given to businesses in the City of London on the best kinds of explosion-resistant replacement glazing since 24 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The City of London police, in conjunction with Government security advisers, has been advising businesses and institutions in the City on the available range of glazing options. This complements the advice which is available from specialists in the private sector.

Confessions

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the cases of those convicted on the evidence of confession alone, before the introduction of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend is always ready to consider representations alleging wrongful conviction, whatever the nature of the evidence in the case, and to exercise his powers wherever it is appropriate to do so. He has, however, no plans to institute a general review of cases falling into the category described.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last convenient 12-month period he has overturned the recommendation of the adjudicator at the immigration appellate authority to exercise his discretion outside the immigration rules.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All recommendations made by adjudicators are, however, carefully considered in the light of the known facts.

Open Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the criteria used by the Prison Service when allocating prisoners to open rather than closed prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the criteria used by the Prison Service when allocating to open prisons.

Guidance to Prison Service establishments explains that all adult male prisoners (apart from those regarded by headquarters as requiring high security conditions, and life sentence prisoners, for whom separate allocation arrangements are made) should be regarded as probably suitable for an open prison unless they are sentenced to a term of over 12 months for any violent offence, are convicted of any but the most minor sexual offence, had previously served a sentence of over 12 months for such an offence and had not successfully remained for part of that sentence in an open prison, have current or previous convictions for minor or serious drugs offences, or have a recent history of escapes or absconds. Prisoners who come within these criteria, would be placed in a security category which would require them to be held in closed conditions. Having decided security categorisation, the local prison then must decide on the establishment to which the prisoner should be allocated. Allocation decisions take into account the need for security and control, the need to make best use of the Prison Service estate and the needs of the individual prisoner.

Separate guidance applies to male young offenders and female prisoners. But the approach is similar in that an assessment of risk is made on the basis of information on the current and any previous offences before deciding on the appropriate establishment to which the inmate should be allocated.

With the passage of time or changes in circumstances, many prisoners become less of a risk and less likely to try to escape. Some long term or life sentence prisoners may merit downgrading to a lower security category more than once. A prisoner who was originally allocated to a closed prison may therefore be reallocated to an open prison at a later stage in his or her sentence. I hope this has provided a helpful summary of the approach we take to allocation. But if you woulds like to have more information, I should be pleased to provide it.

Redbridge and Snaresbrook Courts

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) criminal and (b) motoring cases were brought to trial at Redbridge magistrates court and Snaresbrook Crown court for each quarter of 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993 to date.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1990 and 1991 is given in the table. Information for 1992 and 1993 is not yet available.

Number of defendants prosecuted at Redbridge magistrates court and number of defendants tried at Snaresbrook Crown court for "criminal"[1] and "motoring"[2] case by quarter, 1990 and 1991.

Year/ Quarter	Redbridge PSD		Snaresbrook CC
	Criminal[1]	Motoring[2,3]	Criminal[1]	Motoring[2]
1990
Q1	961	449	1,112	12
Q2	1,103	638	1,054	3
Q3	838	840	1,144	4
Q4	783	779	1,044	5
1991
Q1	925	1,066	1,020	4
Q2	906	1,103	1,064	4
Q3	956	1,189	1,074	4
Q4	901	1,365	935	3

[1] Indictable and summary non-motoring offences.
[2] Summary motoring offences.
[3] Improvements in the data collection methods used by the Metropolitan police district (MPD) have led to an increase in the number recorded as sentenced for summary motoring offences of about 50 per cent. in the MPD area as a whole.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include four options on the range of alternatives to be presented to the Houses of Parliament on Sunday trading.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. The Government's Bill to reform Sunday trading law will now contain an option based on proposals made by the Retailers for Shops Act Reform. This is in addition to total deregulation and the options based on the proposals of the Shopping Hours Reform Council and the Keep Sunday Special Campaign.

Prison Population

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which years he expects the prison population to exceed the certified normal accommodation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On the basis of projections of the prison population published on 30 March—Home Office Statistical Bulletin 6/93—the projected population would not exceed certified normal accommodation before the end of the decade. It is, however, not yet possible to make any conclusive assessment of the impact of changes to the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords] proposed by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

European Constituencies

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made by the Parliamentary Boundaries Commission towards alterations in European constituency boundaries in the light of the United Kingdom's future increased membership of the European Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We hope to make an announcement on this matter shortly.

Computerised Crime Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on his most recent evaluation of the effectiveness and cost of the computerised crime report information system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend receives regular reports on the progress of the crime reporting information system.

Prison Ships

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with the Bibby Line.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 26 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about discussions with the Bibby Line.

The Prison Service has had a number of discussions with representatives of the Bibby Line over the last 6 years or so.

Floating accommodation units are an option being considered to cope with surges of prison population. No final decision has been taken on the feasibility of this option.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration the Prison Service is giving to the use of ships for prisoners' accommodation; and in what circumstances ships might be used for prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 25 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the use of ships for prisoner accommodation.

The Prison Service has for some time been developing contingency plans to cope with surges of prison population which exceed the available accommodation. If effective plans can be devolved, they will reduce the need to have recourse to police cells to hold excess population.

Floating accommodation units are one option which is being considered, though as yet no final decision has been taken on the feasibility of this option.

Police Authorities

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police authorities with which he has had discussions between taking his present office and 22 March.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In addition to my meetings with the Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire police authorities, my right hon. and learned Friend has visited Hertfordshire, Avon and Somerset, West Midlands, Thames Valley and Surrey police forces, when he also met representatives of their police authorities: and he has had meetings with delegations of police authority chairmen from the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities.

Queen Anne's Gate

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated amount to be spent in 1993-94 in rent and other associated costs with the offices of his Department in Queen Anne's Gate, London.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated amount to be spent in 1993-94 on Home Office accommodation at Queen Anne's Gate is £21·9 million, comprising rent and value added tax, payable to Property Holdings, contribution in lieu of rates, maintenance and capital costs and the cost of fuel, utilities and telephones.

National Debate for Crime Prevention

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who has been appointed to the National Board for Crime Prevention.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The membership of the National Board for Crime Prevention is as follows:

Michael Jack MP, Minister of State, Home Office (Chairman)
Keith Ackroyd, Boots plc; British Retail Consortium
Peter Batchelor, Vauxhall Motors
Janet Paraskeva, National Youth Agency
Prof. Ken Pease, University of Manchester
Richard Penn, Chief Executive, Bradford MBC
Dr. John Rae, Portman Group
Helen Reeves, Victim Support
Nick Ross, Broadcaster
David Sieff, Marks and Spencer
John Stevens, Chief Constable, Northumbria
David Walton, Chief Probation Officer, Staffordshire

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what investigations his Department has been subject by the Data Protection Registrar in relation to a suspected breach of a data protection principle; if he will summarise the nature of each complaint and state when the complaint was made; and what remedial action was taken by his Department to ensure future compliance with the principle subject to the investigation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 May 1993]: The Data Protection Registrar has recorded 10 complaints against the Home Office. The registrar does not have detailed records of these complaints available, but gives the following information:

Complaint type	Number received	Date received
Principle 4	1	27 January 1993
Principle 5	1	16 December 1991
Principle 7	6	12 November 1987
		25 February 1988
		12 June 1989
		28 September 1989
		5 November 1991
		15 March 1993
Section 5(1)	1	10 February 1990
Unauthorised disclosure	1	26 March 1992

The Home Office has central records of only four complaints:

1. Passport Agency: Principle 4
(Received in the Home Office 19 February 1993)

A complainant was asked for his marital status when renewing his passport, and held that this was excessive information for the purpose for which it was required. The registrar accepted that the Data Protection Act did not apply as the information was not held on a computer.

2. Prison Service: Principle 7
(Received in the Home Office 16 October 1989)

The complainant was an inmate of Lincoln Prison, and alleged that he had not been given access to a computer record containing personal data relating to him. The complainant was informed of the proper procedures for requesting access to his computer record, and the registrar concluded his investigation.

3. TV Licences: Principle 5
(Received in the Home Office 10 March 1988)

A complainant said that the initial of his first name shown on his TV licence was incorrect. The complainant's TV licence was amended to show his correct name, and the registrar concluded his investigation.

4. Prison Service: Principle 7
(Received in the Home Office 7 March 1988)

The complainant was an inmate of Durham prison, and alleged that a request for subject access to a computer record held on him at the prison had not been complied with. The complainant subsequently withdrew his claim to have made a subject access request, and the registrar closed his file.

Since 1987, every Home Office department has held detailed instructions on compliance with the requirements and principles of the Data Protection Act in general, and on subject access procedures specifically. None of the complaints made to date suggests that those procedures need any amendment. The procedures are, however, kept under review and will be updated as and when necessary.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in remand for (a) three to six months, (b) six to 12 months and (c) over 12 months in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 24 May 1993]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 26 May 1993:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of prisoners held on remand for (a) 3 to 6 months, (b) 6 to 12 months and (c) over 12 months in each year since 1990.

I am sorry to tell you that information is only readily available up to 30 June 1992. To obtain any later information at this stage would involve checking a large number of cases with Prison Service establishments which could only be done at disproportionate cost. Please find enclosed a table showing the length of time held on remand for inmates on 30 June in the years 1990, 1991 and 1992. The information for 1990 and 1991 was taken from Tables 2.3 and 2.4 of "Prison statistics, England and Wales 1991" (Cm 1221) a copy of which is held in the library. The information for 30 June 1992 is provisional; final data will be published in the 1992 edition of "Prison statistics".

SCOTLAND

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the provision of in vitro fertilisation treatment; what is the current waiting list for this treatment; and what arrangements are in place to ensure that women in need of this treatment receive it at an appropriate stage of physical development and age.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) on 10 March, Official Report, column 593-94.

There are four centres currently offering in vitro fertilisation treatment in Scotland, at Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. Information on their waiting lists is not held centrally. It is for individual health boards to decide whether or not to provide or purchase these services.

Fire Service Benevolent Fund

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Fire Services National Benevolent Fund in Scotland; what matters were discussed; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have not yet had the opportunity of meeting representatives of the Fire Services National Benevolent Fund in Scotland. Other commitments have regrettably prevented me from accepting invitations to the 50th anniversary commemorative service in Stirling and the fund's golden jubilee reception at the Guildhall, London to celebrate fifty years of charitable endeavour in support of retired and serving members of the United Kingdom fire services.

Horticulture (Therapeutic Treatment)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the use and development of horticulture as a therapeutic treatment within the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The national health service has long understood the part that horticultural work can play in the treatment programmes of, for example, patients with a mental illness or learning difficulty. Decisions about its use and development are however a matter for NHS provider units based on identified clinical needs.

Food, Drinks and Confectionery

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the state of the food, drinks and confectionery industry in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde.

Mr. Stewart: The most recent annual census of production data show gross value added (GVA) in the food, drink and tobacco industry in Scotland in 1990 was 70 per cent. higher than in 1980. GVA in the industry in Strathclyde rose by over 40 per cent. between 1983 and 1990.

The industry has of course been restructuring, but it remains a major employer. The last census of employment (September 1991) showed that there were 66,400 employees in the food, drink and tobacco industry in Scotland; around 25,600 were in Strathclyde.

I note that independent forecasters, whose projections are monitored regularly by the Scottish Office Industry Department, suggest that further output growth may, in general, be anticipated in the industry in the next few years.

Thread Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of people employed in the thread industry in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Renfrew district in each year siuce 1975, showing the numbers that were (i) full-time or part-time, (ii) managerial, adminstrative and technical or manual and (iii) male and female; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: This data are not available in the precise form requested. Employment cannot be classified into full or part time; managerial, administrative, technical, manual; or male and female. In addition figures for Renfrew district are subject to disclosure restrictions under the Statistics of Trade Act 1947.

The table shows the total number or employees in the thread industry for Strathclyde and Scotland in each year since 1975. The thread industry in common with other industries requires a favourable economic climate in which to prosper. The Government's policy of low interest rates and low inflation is helping to stimulate the Scottish economy. The thread industry can be expected to share in this process.

Number of Employees in the Thread Industry

	Strathclyde	Scotland
1975	4,306	6,335
1976	4,080	6,196
1977	4,219	6,218
1978	3,329	5,229
1979	3,239	4,901
1980	2,840	4,184
1981	2,164	3,522
1982	1,662	2,639
1983	1,385	2,339
1984	1,121	2,120
1985	1,019	1,974
1986	1,164	2,165
1987	1,195	2,299
1988	1,005	2,047
1989	1,036	2,088
1990	838	1,736
[1]1991	690	1,549

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

1. This data have been extracted from the Scottish register of employment which holds information on units with 11 or more employees.
2. The thread industry has been defined as standard industrial classification (SIC) 43211 and 43212; spinning and doubling in the cotton system.

Solicitor-General for Scotland

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are in place for the Solicitor-General for Scotland to be accountable to both Houses of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The present Solicitor-General for Scotland is not a member of either House. When neither the Lord Advocate nor the Solicitor-General for Scotland is a member of this House, it is the practice for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to answer questions relating to their responsibilities.

It is open to a Select Committee of this House or the other place to invite the Solicitor-General for Scotland to give evidence to the Select Committee in relation to any matter falling within the orders of reference of the Committee. In particular, the Select Committee for Scottish Affairs in this House is empowered to consider the administration and expenditure of the Lord Advocate's Departments. I do not propose to make a statement.

Prison Service

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the organisation and management of the Scottish Prison Service; what arrangements are currently in place for compulsory competitive tendering within the service; if he has any plans to make any other service element subject to CCT; and if he has any plans to introduce any form of privatisation to the service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Prison Service became an executive agency on 1 April 1993.

The Scottish Prison Service is currently market testing the maintenance and minor works projects at Barlinnie, Shotts, Edinburgh and Perth prisons—annual cost £3·7 million, 115 staff—and the storage and distribution service which operates from central stores—annual cost £800,000, 22 staff.

The Secretary of State is currently considering with the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service possibilities for further market testing and an announcement will be made in the summer.

Market testing might lead to contracting out, but there are no plans to privatise any part of the Scottish Prison Service.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of people employed in each industrial sector within Renfrew district in each year since 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Local authority district employment data are available in selected years, on a consistent basis from 1981. The table shows the number of people employed in each industrial sector within Renfrew district in that year and in 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991. It can be seen that the economy of Renfrew has experienced the process of structural change, a common feature of many modern economies towards a more diversified structure.

Employment figures for Renfrew by SIC

Standard industrial classification	1981	1984	1987	1989	1991
0-1 Agriculture forestry and fishing/Energy and Water supply industries	1,600	1,500	1,400	1,100	1,000
2-4 Manufacturing	32,900	27,400	21,400	20,300	19,100
5 Construction	8,200	6,700	5,900	5,500	5,200
6 Distribution, hotels and catering; repairs	14,000	14,300	12,500	13,500	14,700
7 Transport and communication	5,500	5,000	6,800	7,700	7,600
8 Banking, finance, insurance, business services and leasing	3,000	4,400	3,700	5,500	5,700
9 Other services	23,100	18,700	15,600	27,000	27,100

Language Disorders

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Scotland have language disorders; and what provision exists in Scotland for children with language disorders.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the time of the 1991 schools census, some 1,719 children were recorded as having difficulties with language and communication. Education authorities in Scotland secure provision of a range of facilities for these children in mainstream schools and in special units.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the appropriate level of staffing and other provision for children with language and speech disorders and on the location of these provisions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the responsibility of education authorities to provide adequate and efficient education for children, including those with special educational needs. It is, therefore, for authorities to decide the appropriate level and location of staffing and other provisions for children with speech and language disorders.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what language disorders are covered by the report for his Department by Her Majesty's inspector Mr. Gibson; and when he plans to publish the report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current investigation into educational provision for language and communication disorders is being conducted by a small team of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools and covers the special provision made for children with both linguistic and non-linguistic disorders. The children concerned are those with disorders in phonology, syntax, semantics and pragmatics of language, together with those with pervasive communication disorders such as autism. The investigation will be completed this autumn and a report published thereafter.

Judges (Training)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are taken to ensure that the training of judges, and those about to be elevated to the Bench, includes a course on the handling of sexual assault and rape cases.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has provided additional administrative and financial support in recent years to facilitate the development of training to meet the needs of the judiciary. The content of judicial training is a matter for the judiciary and comprehensive information is not available centrally on the training undertaken by individual judges.

Criminal Courts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and reports he has received during the past 12 months on the efficiency of criminal courts in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Opening the Scottish Grand Committee debate on crime on 25 March, my right hon. Friend announced that he had just received the first report of the groups which have been reviewing court programming under the chairmanship of Sheriff Principal Gordon Nicholson QC and Sheriff Graham Cox. The report will be published shortly for consultation on its recommendations. Copies of the report will be made available to Scottish Members of Parliament.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Argyll and Clyde health board on the subject of toxic shock syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from Argyll and Clyde health board on this subject.

Community Care Forums

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of community care forums throughout Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: To encourage the involvement of voluntary sector agencies in the preparation and implementation of community care plans, community care forums are developing in many areas. The scale, structure and funding of these vary in response to local conditions. My right hon. Friend welcomes these developments which enable the voluntary sector to participate more fully in the development of community care.

Youth Training

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the sufficiency of youth training places in Renfrewshire; how many eligible youths in the past two years have failed to obtain a place; how many have (a) been offered and (b) accepted other than first choice of training; what proportion this is of total trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The delivery of youth training in Renfrewshire is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise through its contact with the relevant local enterprise company, Renfrewshire Enterprise. Scottish Enterprise has assured me that the Government's youth training guarantee is being met, and will continue to be met, within that area.

This assurance implies that no eligible young people who have applied for a youth training place have failed to receive offers of suitable places, which is the entitlement conferred by the guarantee, although there will at any time be current applicants awaiting identification of a suitable place. The vast majority of young people receive offers of training through the careers service who take a number of factors into account, including the young person's preference, the local labour market and the abilities and aptitudes of the young person. The role of careers officers is to use their expertise to offer suitable training, even in cases where this differs from the young person's first choice.

In the light of the obligation on local enterprise companies to ensure that offers of training places continue to be made to eligible young people for as long as they continue to seek a place and of the responsibility of the careers service to judge what constitutes a suitable offer of training, the Scottish Office does not hold information about numbers of young people who choose not to take up any of the offers of youth training places which they receive or who are offered and accept places involving training which differs from their initial preference.

Forestry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the silviculture and forestry industry in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Our forestry policies remain as stated in "Forestry Policy for Great Britain" published in September 1991, a copy of which is in the Library.

Economic Prospects

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prospects for the economy of (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Renfrew District.

Mr. Stewart: The economic prospects for Scotland, like those for Strathclyde and Renfrew district, will depend on the competitiveness of its industry. The Government have ensured that many of the factors determining competitiveness, and hence economic growth, are now firmly in place: inflation is at its lowest rate for almost 30 years; United Kingdom interest rates are at their lowest level for 15 years, as well as being the lowest in the European Community; and unit labour costs in manufacturing are growing more slowly than those in Japan and Germany.

Economic forecasters monitored by the Scottish Office Industry Department predict that these factors, combined with the lower exchange rate, will result in positive economic growth in Scotland in 1993, with companies competing successfully in domestic and international markets. Indeed, Cambridge Econometics' recent forecast suggests that Scottish gross domestic product growth in 1993 will be 2·2 per cent. compared with 1·4 per cent. for the United Kingdom as a whole. Moreover, this positive rate of growth compares favourably with the negative rates predicted for some of the European economies.

Parents (Fines)

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parents were fined in Scotland in each of the last 10 years for failing to send their children to school.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Party Conferences

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of security arrangements in relation to the Scottish (a) Conservative and (b) Labour party conferences in 1993; what proportion in each case was charged to the operational budgets of the respective police forces; what is the expected individual per capita cost to council tax payers in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand from the chief constables of Lothian and Borders police and Northern constabulary that the costs involved were £56,700 and £700, respectively. The level of resources provided for the policing of party conferences is an operational matter for the chief constable concerned to determine in the light of all the circumstances, including the threat assessment. Fifty-one per cent. of police costs are reimbursed by the Government in specific grant. The remaining 49 per cent. is funded by police authorities from the different sources of finance available to them; the authorities determine which sources of finance meet the cost of particular services.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has an advisory committee on disability issues.

Mr. Stewart: No, but the Department is represented on a number of committees which consider disability issues.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those buildings used by his Department which (a) have and (b) do not have adequate access for people with mobility disabilities; what plans he has to improve each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office currently uses 93 buildings, mainly offices. There is adequate access for people with mobility disabilities to 54 of these, which include all our major buildings. Access is less good at the other 39, which are mainly small premises. Action to improve access is taken as resources permit although the design of some older or smaller local offices makes that difficult. Plans are in hand to improve access to the offices in Elgin and Stornoway.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what duties, responsibilities and rights of inspection Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in Scotland has over the new structure of further education colleges; what changes have been made in the role of HMI since 1 April; if any further changes are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Her Majesty's inspectors' duties, responsibilities and rights of inspection in further education continue as before. Their main additional duty will be, in co-operation with the relevant administrative division, to advise my right hon. Friend on the corporate plans submitted by the FE colleges.

Genetic Fingerprinting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce additional measures to increase the availability to police forces of genetic fingerprinting techniques and resources; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Police authorities determine what resources should be allocated to their forces. It is then for chief constables to decide how these resources should be deployed. Tayside and Strathclyde police laboratories already carry out DNA testing or "genetic fingerprinting" and Lothian and Borders police plan to introduce such a facility when their new laboratory opens in 1995-96. Scottish police forces also have access to the facilities provided by the Forensic Science Service in England and Wales and by the private sector.

Cancer Screening

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the competence of the cervical smear tests carried out in the Paisley catchment area in the last 20 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The assessment of the competency of cervical smear tests is a matter for the clinicians responsible for such tests and for health boards. All laboratories participate in the national proficiency testing scheme.

The inquiry into the review of the smear test slides at Inverclyde royal hospital laboratory will be examining quality assessment arrangements.

Sports Centre Funding

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an official visit to the McMaster sports centre in the Johnstone west area of priority treatment to evaluate the contribution his Department made towards it from urban aid funding; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I welcome opportunities to see the benefits of the assistance provided by the Scottish Office through the urban programme. I would be delighted to visit the McMaster sports centre in Johnstone west when a suitable opportunity arises.

Electoral Expenditure

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the fees and expenses paid to (a) returning officers, (b) depute returning officers and (c) all other grades of polling and counting staff for each of the most recent (i) European, (ii) parliamentary, (iii) regional council and (iv) district council elections; if he will itemise the eligibility criteria for the payment of these fees and expenses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about local government election fees and expenses is a matter for local authorities individually and is not held centrally. As far as parliamentary and European elections are concerned, the rates of fees and expenses payable and eligibility criteria for payments to returning officers, their deputies and other elections staff are set out in the relevant fees and charges order. The statutory instruments in force at the last European and United Kingdom parliamentary elections were, respectively: SI 1989, No. 995, the European Parliamentary Elections (Returning Officers' Expenses) Regulations 1989, which came into force on 13 June 1989, and SI 1992, No. 717, the Returning Officers' Charges Order 1992, which came into force on 17 March 1992.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take capping action against any Scottish local authority this year.

Mr. Lang: No. All Scottish local authorities, with the exception of Clydebank district council and Shetland Islands council, have set budgets for 1993-94 at or below the expenditure limits implied by the provisional capping principles which I announced on 12 November 1992. I made it clear subsequently that I would not cap Clydebank district council if it set a standstill budget. The council has satisfied this requirement. Shetland Islands council which, given its special circumstances particularly as regards its oil-related special funds, will fund only a very small proportion of its planned expenditure from its council tax which, at taxpayer level, is the lowest in Scotland. In the circumstances, I do not propose to cap the council.

Overall, this is a very satisfactory outcome and again demonstrates the effectiveness of my capping powers in protecting local taxpayers from excessive spending by their councils. It is my intention to issue later this year provisional capping principles for 1994-95.

Woodlands

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), on 2 February, Official Report, column 177, if he will give the date on which the access agreement in respect of Steam Mills in Gloucestershire was signed; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 May 1993]: The access agreement for Steam Mills in Gloucestershire was signed on 31 March 1992. I have arranged for a copy of the agreement to be placed in the Library.

Forestry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement outlining the Government's policy on the development of the Forestry Commission in the United Kingdom; and what plans he has for change in ownership of the forests.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 17 May 1993]: The policies for forestry which my right hon. Friend and his fellow forestry Ministers intend to pursue remain as stated in "Forestry Policy for Great Britain" published in September 1991, a copy of which is in the Library.

The Forestry Commission plays a central role in the delivery of those policies, particularly through its support for and regulation of the private sector and the management of the forests owned by the Government.

However, forestry Ministers have established the Forestry Review Group to review:

the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment, in accordance with the manifesto commitment, and options for the ownership and management of Forestry Commission woodlands, and to make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, having regard to the Government's other economic and environmental policies.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those individuals and organisations who have so far made submissions to the inter-departmental working group on the Forestry Commission; and if he will publish those submissions.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 May 1993]: Many individuals and organisations have written to Ministers and Government Departments giving their views on issues connected with the work of the Forestry Review Group. However, they did not do so in the knowledge or expectation that their names or their submissions would be published and I therefore do not think it would be right to publish this information.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much is spent by the Forestry Commission on conservation projects; and what is this figure as a proportion of turnover;

(2) if he will outline the work done by the Forestry Commission on current conservation projects.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 May 1993]: The Forest Enterprise arm of the Forestry Commission, which manages the commission's forests, spends over £5 million each year on conservation projects, which is about 5 per cent. of its turnover. These projects include the management of 340 sites of special scientific interest and other areas of conservation value—including forest nature reserves—and of archaeological sites. They also include projects for particular species of flora and fauna. Examples are the construction of an insulated hibernaculum for bats in Yorkshire; providing nesting boxes for barn owls, goldeneye and many other birds; managing forests to provide better habitats for black grouse and capercaillie, to protect goshawks and other birds of prey, and to provide nesting sites for nightjars and red-backed shrikes; encouraging orchids in south Wales and south-west England; creating artificial islands for black-throated divers; making suitable rides and other open spaces to attract butterflies; protecting hen harriers in the highlands of Scotland; managing pinewoods in Culbin to protect the lichens; and providing basking areas for lizards and other reptiles in Northamptonshire.

In addition to direct expenditure on such conservation projects, the Forestry Commission also carries out a great deal of work to improve the conservation value of its forests as part of its normal forest management. This covers, for example, the management of ancient semi-natural woodlands and the protection and expansion of native pinewood areas in Scotland and of heathland in the New Forest and other parts of southern England. It also includes the restructuring of commission forests as they mature to increase their variety and conservation value. This is achieved by premature or delayed felling of the trees, widening the mixture of trees on replanting and leaving open areas. This can result in significant revenue forgone, none of which is included in the costs given above.

Credit Unions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to promote the development of credit unions in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

The credit union movement in Scotland has continued to grow. At the end of 1991, the latest year for which full figures are available, returns to the Registry of Friendly Societies show that there were 66 credit unions in Scotland, compared to 57 at the end of 1990. They had aggregate assets of £7,866,000, compared to £5,051,000. This was the equivalent to nearly 34 per cent., compared to 30 per cent., of the total assets of the movement in Great Britain. Those 66 unions together had around 27,000 members, compared to 19,000 in 1990, representing 39 per cent., compared to 35 per cent., of the total in Great Britain.

The latest figures available for the current year indicate that the growth is continuing, with 76 Scottish unions now on the register.

Management Consultants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 March to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms Mowlam), Official Report, columns 222-28, if he will give (a) the names, (b) the purpose and (c) the gross amounts paid to management consultants used by the Scottish Office since he was appointed, not already listed in his answer: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 May 1993]: Due to the quantity of information needed to answer this question, I will write to the hon. Member. Copies of my reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 225

SESSION 1992–93

17th May, 1993—27th May, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
